Won't be blackmailed, says McClelland

McCLELLAND
. . . assurances

Oak Bay Manor has no legal right to evict 138 long-term care patients by Thursday, Health Minister Bob McCleland said today.

He also said the provincial government will not be blackmailed into allowing the privately-owned manor, which has had a large number of problems, to continue operating as a long-term care facility.

Under the Landlord and Tenant Act, a landlord must give 30-days eviction notice.

Last week, the government announced it was cancelling the interim long-term care licence for the manor, built in 1972 as a luxury retirement home between Cadboro Bay Road and Cranmore Street.

The licence expires Thursday.

Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith told council Monday night that the manor had given the 138 elderly long-term care patients until then to leave.

"I want to assure them that we will do everything we can to see that their lives aren't disrupted any further."

A meeting was arranged for today between health ministry officials and the manor's owner, Neil Cook of Vancouver, to clarify the situation.

Smith told council the manor shouldn't be able to give the patients five days notice and added he will press for provincial legislation to allow the minister of health to impose a trusteeship in such situations so there can be no sudden eviction of patients.

He said he asked the government to institute an inquiry into the manor following two deaths there and the result was that the licensing board had recommended that the interim licence not be renewed.

But, said Smith, in situations such as this patients are not suddenly evicted but the private owner and the government, which pays for the care of the patients, agree on a changeover period of time, either to upgrade facilities or to move patients out.

Saying that there has to be sensible relocation, Smith said he has received many phone calls from relatives of patients. "It's a very, very unhappy result," he said.

Smith said he hopes Cook will agree to a more reasonable time so patients can be relocated.

All DC-10s grounded for probe

Times News Services

OTTAWA (CP) — All DC-10s in the world, including the only two flying in Canada and owned by Wardair, are grounded following findings by the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) of suspected metal fatigue, say transport department officials.

The action was taken as a result of the investigation into last Friday's crash of an American Airlines DC-10 in Chicago which claimed at least 273 lives in the worst air disaster in U.S. history.

The grounding order was extended also to U.S.-registered A300 Airbuses, a European-made twin-engined jet. The FAA said the engine mounting structure on that airplane is similar to that of a DC-10.

FAA Administrator Langhorne Bond said the order will remain in effect until all of the engine assemblies can be checked.

Bond told a news conference that he learned of the results of the visual inspections of the assemblies that hold the engines on the aircraft about two hours before ordering the DC-10s grounded.

"I have no choice but to ground all U.S. DC-10s immediately," he told reporters.

Bond indicated the trouble involves more than just the bolt that gave way on the American Airlines DC-10 that crashed in Chicago.

Sources said earlier that the planes will be grounded because of the discovery of metal fatigue.

He said the government is requiring an inspection of "the entire system that links DC-10 engines to the wings."

He gave no indication how long it will take to carry out the inspections.

Just before Bond made his announcement, McDonnell Douglas Corp., manufacturer of the DC-10, issued an "alert service bulletin" calling for immediate additional inspections of the engine pylons of all the planes before they are flown again.

The company said this was being done because of a crack discovered in a pylon on a DC-10 that was being inspected in Chicago.

"No DC-10 should fly until this inspection is made," McDonnell Douglas spokesman Ray Towne said in Long Beach, Calif.

Meanwhile, in Chicago, United Airlines said it is grounding all of its DC-10s immediately.

Metal fatigue implies a weakening of metal parts or structures because of extended use, vibration, other stress or faulty manufacture.

The investigation has already sparked disagreement between two U.S. government safety officials — one in Washington, the other at the crash scene in Chicago — who disagree over whether American Airlines Flight 191 was doomed when an engine fell off.

One expert said it was impossible to control the aircraft once the engine separated, while another says loss of the engine alone would not have fatally crippled the DC-10.

But investigators in Chicago said Monday that flight data recorded on the jet shows the crew was trying to correct the problems before it crashed.

Gold tops old mark yet again

LONDON (AP) — Gold hit a record $277.625 an ounce in Zurich today as the U.S. dollar firmed in quiet trading on the world's money markets. The noon quote in Zurich was $1.75 above Monday's closing price of $275.875, the previous high.

London's five major bullion dealers fixed the price for the morning trading session at $276.10, a record for the London market. The gold and foreign currency markets were closed in London on Monday for the spring bank holiday. But gold had closed Friday at $270.25

The metal has risen almost $30 an ounce in the last month and more than $50 since the start of this year. Some dealers predict a price of about $300 by the end of 1979.

Bishop takes over

SALISBURY (AP) — Bishop Abel Muzorewa, Rhodesia's first black prime minister, was sworn into office today, ending 90 years of white-minority rule in the former British colony.

Muzorewa, a United Methodist bishop, took the oath of office shortly after being asked to form a government by Rhodesia's first black president, Joseph Gumede, also sworn in today.

Muzorewa was expected to name his 19-member cabinet Wednesday. His government will be installed Friday.

Rhodesia also faces continuation of the guerrilla war waged by exiled nationalist leaders Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, a boycott from the rest of black Africa and uncertain chances for recognition by the United States and Britain.

Gumede, a former schoolmaster and diplomat and descendant of a 19th-century Zulu warrior-chief, was elected to the ceremonial figurehead presidency Monday by the two houses of the new parliament elected last month. He is a member of the Ndebele tribe and is expected to act as a bridge between his people and Muzorewa's dominant Shona tribe.

Muzorewa, whose United African National Council won 51 of the 100 seats in the lower house, will name a cabinet of 19 members including five whites. But two of the three other black parties announced they would not accept the two cabinet seats allotted each of them by a proportional representation system in the constitution.

Bumping pays for family and makes a profit too

TORONTO (CP) — A vacationing Toronto family has been bumped from an overbooked airline flight for the second time in 10 days, but the family is happy and $1,300 richer.

Richard Gordon, his wife, Marlene, and their two children, Melanie, 9, and Tara, 6, volunteered to give up their seats on two overbooked American Airlines flights out of Toronto on May 18 as they started their Bermuda vacation.

To compensate them for the delays, American paid them $700 in U.S. funds or about $810 Canadian.

Heading back to Toronto during the weekend, the Gordons were on an overbooked flight from New York and once again offered to give up their seats.

This time, American paid them $150 U.S. each — a total of $600.

"The way I see it is that we had a marvellous holiday, and we made a profit of about $900 Canadian after our expenses were paid," said Gordon, 35, who was going to Bermuda for a convention but decided to turn the trip into a family vacation after a baby-sitter fell ill.

"We hadn't planned to take the children until the last minute and if it hadn't been for them we wouldn't have made so much money. The girls netted $700 (U.S.) between them."

Mrs. Gordon, 32, said: "It was just a big joke.

"We were in no hurry so we kept volunteering to be bumped off flights."

Unlucky prowler runs into family of joggers

EDMONTON (CP) — The prowler who invaded Basil O'Brien's home didn't know what he was running into.

In bare feet and underwear the O'Brien boys and their father, all long-distance runners, literally ran the prowler into the ground.

"We were all out the door and chasing the guy before we knew what we were doing," said O'Brien, 47, president of the Edmonton Track and Field Council.

Most of the family was sleeping soundly at 4:30 a.m. Saturday. Only Ada O'Brien, the boys' mother, was having difficulty sleeping.

"I heard noises downstairs and at first I thought it was one of the kids," Mrs. O'Brien said. She got out of bed and spotted a darkly-dressed man crouched on the TV room floor.

The man jumped up, ran outside through the patio windows, then stopped to turn around and stare at Mrs. O'Brien.

Her shouts of burglar, burglar catapulted her husband four sons from their beds. Chris, 22, was the first up the stairs from his basement bedroom.

"I just leaped up the stairs. The front door was open and I just took off after him," said Chris, a six-year running veteran known in the family as the Marathon Man.

"I saw everyone charging out the front door and I took off out the door after them," said Kevin, 20.

"The whole family got involved in the chase," he said, while their mother phoned the police.

It was Chris who ran the prowler to ground across lawns, streets and through a stubble field.

"It was killing my feet but I didn't notice until later."

Chris chased the prowler for almost a mile before hauling him down with a flying tackle. He pulled the prowler's jacket off and was starting to walk away leaving the man gasping for air on the ground.

"There was no one around and I couldn't drag him back, so I took his jacket and started to walk away. I saw police lights and I thought, oh no, I'm in my underwear."

Turning around, Chris saw the prowler back on his feet and starting to run again. A 250-yard chase, another tackle and a brief wrestling match finally subdued him

Jogging away with $300

A jogger-turned-bandit held up a small convenience store near Oak Bay junction Monday night and sprinted away with about $300 from the till.

City police today were searching for the suspect, described as a man in his mid-20s.

A police spokesman said the knife-wielding man jogged into Freddy The Freeloaders at 1537 Fort shortly before 8:30 p.m. and ordered clerk Charles Griffiths, 23, to open the till.

There was no one else in the store at the time.

Charlotte hospital closure threat

The Queen Charlotte General Hospital will be forced to close its doors unless the provincial health ministry relents on proposed budget cutbacks, hospital administrator Neil Gibbs said today.

Gibbs said from his office in the Charlottes, however, that he feels the provincial government will reconsider its position and provide the hospital with additional funds.

The government has chopped the hospital's budget by about $76,000 over 1978 figures — proposing funding of $131,000 less than the $621,000 requested this year.

Gibbs says the figures suggested by the ministry of health would mean reducing the hospital's full-time staff level from 24 employees to 14.

"At that staffing level an unsafe situation would be created . . . so we would have to close it down," Gibbs said in an interview.

He added, though, that "I don't feel that any reasonable or responsible person, once aware of the facts, would force such an action."

Gibbs said the hospital has launched an appeal against the proposed budget cutback and expected a final decision by the end of June.

In the meantime the hospital will continue to operate as normal.

Gibbs said the ministry had based its budget decision on a predicted decline in patients, but figures for the first three months of this year indicate an increased patient load beyond the hosptial's original estimate.

"Sometimes things change overnight," said Gibbs in explaining the hospital's underestimate on patient load, "and that's what happened in this case."

In addition to budget problems the hospital is facing difficulties because of a threatened walk-out by the five provincially-employed doctors that staff the 50-bed unit.

The five doctors tendered their resignations effective July 1 in a dispute with the health ministry about overtime payments. The doctors say they will quit unless there is a long-term commitment from the ministry that they will be paid for visiting patients outside of office hours.

The ministry says the request is under negotiation and, while it has agreed in principal to pay for visiting patients outside normal hours, it will not make a long-term commitment until the negotiations have been completed.

PCs seek televised swear-in

OTTAWA (CP) — Federal political power will pass formally to Joe Clark and his Progressive Conservatives from Pierre Trudeau's Liberals at what may be a protocol-breaking televised ceremony Monday at Government House.

Trudeau meets Gov.-Gen. Edward Schreyer today to advise him of his intention to resign. Schreyer has invited Clark to his residence later in)he day to ask the Progressive Conservative leader if he can form a government.

Monday, Trudeau will resign formally in the morning. Clark and his cabinet will be worn in during the afternoon.

Sources say Conservatives want to open the traditionally private ceremony to television, moving the event from the Governor-General's study to the ballroom at Government House.

Schreyer will decide whether to allow the plan.

Trudeau, Clark and NDP Leader Ed Broadbent have arranged meetings to discuss the changeover.

Judicial recount asked in Vancouver Centre

VANCOUVER (CP) — A judicial recount of ballots cast in Vancouver Centre in the May 22 federal election was ordered Monday following a request by the Progressive Conservative party.

On Friday, an official addition of figures in the riding showed Liberal Art Phillips, former mayor of Vancouver, elected with 15,437 votes, 100 more than Tory candidate Pat Carney. Phillips was the only Liberal elected west of Manitoba.

However, on election night a preliminary count showed Carney two votes ahead of Phillips.

The reduction in Conservative seats gave the NDP the balance of power in the 282-seat Parliament. The Conservatives have 135 seats, the Liberals 115, the NDP 26 and Social Credit six.

County court Judge David Campbell will start the recount on Wednesday.

Meanwhile, the Tories hope to gain another seat in Toronto. An application for a judicial recount of votes cast in the Toronto riding of Parkdale-High Park was accepted in county court Monday.

Yuri Shymko, the Progressive Conservative who won the riding in a 1978 byelection, said he asked for a recount after latest official vote totals from the riding's returns officers showed he trailed Liberal Jesse Flis by 61 votes.

The margin of victory announced election night was 437. That figure was reduced to 61 last Thursday after a check of statistical sheets compiled by deputy returning officers election night.

The recount is to begin Friday morning and take a week to 10 days to complete.

In Montreal, a recalculation of voting totals from the polls in Montreal St. Michel riding in the May 22 federal election has stripped the Liberal candidate of more than 6,000 votes.

That doesn't mean an upset, however. It just means Therese Killens, the Liberal winner, has a plurality of nearly 25,000 votes over the Social Credit runner-up instead of the 31,000-odd votes indicated by election-night figures.

Gisele Goyette, returning officer for the riding, said Monday some duplications in addition on election night led to the inflated figure for Mrs. Killens. Late the same night the figures were recalculated correctly, but the news wasn't passed to all those who had been given the erroneous figures by returning-office representatives.

For the record, Mrs. Killens received 29,046 votes, Socred John Mitchell got 4,293, Jean-Louis Pozza of the Conservatives, 2,604, Filippo Salvatore of the New Democrats 2,587, and another 2,242 votes were divided among four minor-party candidates.

Lovers already knew it: Venus anything but dull

WASHINGTON (AP) — Venus, far from being dull and featureless as many suspected, is a dynamic planet with spectacular terrain and a unique, driving atmosphere, scientists said today.

In the first complete report on the Pioneer Venus spacecraft missions, scientists said radar images show a mountain higher than Mount Everest, the largest rift valley so far sighted in the solar system and a giant plateau dwarfing any found on earth.

And the planet looks like a fuzzy yellow tennis ball because its thick clouds have a unique circulation system made up of atmospheric layers that drive one another with their motion, the scientists said.

The U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) scheduled the briefing by Pioneer project scientists at the annual meeting of the American Geophysical Union.

Pioneer Venus 1 went into orbit around earth's sister planet last December and has been sending back radar and other information since then.

Pioneer Venus 2 arrived days later and divided into five atmospheric probes, four of which reached the smoldering 480°C. surface.

Dr. Harold Masursky of the U.S. Geological Survey said images constructed from radar scanning show a 11,100-metre-high mountain, unofficially called Maxwell, that would tower over earth's largest, the 8,700-metre Mount Everest.

On the opposite side of Venus is a giant rift valley with a crack in the planetary crust down the middle. Masursky said the valley is about 7.2 kilometres deep from its highest ridges and may run for thousands of kilometres.

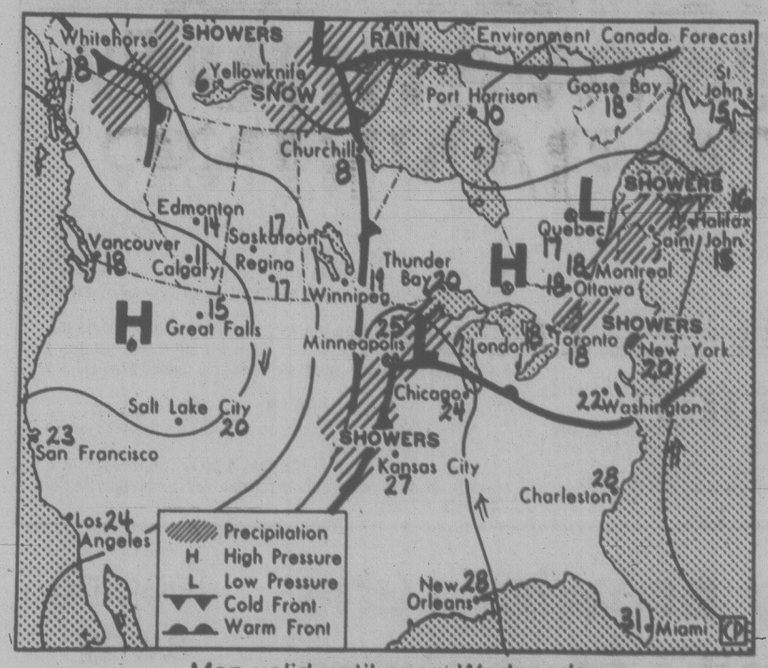

Dr. Alvin Seiff of NASA's Ames Research Centre in California said in an interview that Venus has an atmospheric circulation system different from any known elsewhere.

On the earth, sunlight is absorbed by land and the resulting heat, coupled with the planet's rotation, drives atmospheric motion from west to east.

On Venus, sunlight is absorbed in the atmosphere between 48 and 53 kilometres above the surface, Seiff said. These layers of air, or cells, flow north and south from the equator at speeds of up to 640 km/h to spread heat and motion through the atmosphere.

Map valid until noon Wednesday

The cool unsettled weather for the past few days has begun to moderate as a high pressure system builds from the west. Temperatures will remain a little cooler than normal today. Afternoon clouds and showers or thundershowers are expected again through the eastern interior today. Continuing improvement towards sunny skies and near normal temperatures will occur through the week. However the high pressure area moving over B.C. will allow cloud to gradually increase over the outer coasts. Showers are expected over the Charlottes by Wednesday.

Gas crisis filling up Marguerite

Passenger traffic on the Princess Marquerite cruise ship increased from 10 to 15 per cent during its first month of operation in 1979 compared with the same period a year ago, Tourism Minister Elwood Veitch said today.

Veitch said the increased traffic so far this month is owing to the gasoline shortage in the United States and an earlier start to sailings this season between here and Seattle.

He said the service will continue next year despite the fact it loses money every season.

The minister said he doubts the Marquerite will ever have the capacity to be a money-making operation because it's a costly vessel to run. He added, however, that the cruise ship provides a spinoff benefit to the people of Victoria in tourism revenues.

Charles the matchmaker left with two wallflowers

One of the world's most-eligible bachelors, Prince Charles Monday described his first attempt at matchmaking. Addressing an audience of school principals in Norwich, 140 kilometres northeast of London, the 30-year-old prince said it happened when he was asked to organize a dance while in high school. "Being in the days before co-education had become a polite word," he said, "I was obliged to import a specified number of young ladies from a distant and reputable education establishment. The moment then came when the awkward youths met the giggling girls ... At length, after what seemed an agonizing eternity, there was an ugly rush, everyone paired themselves off and — you won't believe it — I was left with not one but two wallflowers."

Mid-day in Moscow . . . and sightseeing time for Elton John

Walking the Yellow Brick Road, Elton John said Monday he hopes he has paved the way for more Western rock stars to come to the Soviet Union, but noted they better be prepared not to make any money. "It's not a money-making affair at all and that's probably why more groups have decided not to come over," the 32-year-old singer told a Moscow news conference. Young Russians are starved for Western music, he said. "Just from talking to Russian kids outside the concert halls or at the train stations, I see they would like more people to come over," John said.

Bianca Jagger hobbled into London today with an American lawyer to continue her fight for pop star Mick Jagger's millions. Bianca, seeking a divorce from the leader of the Rolling Stones group, walked with a cane because of a fall that hurt her ankle. "It is very painful," she said. Hollywood attorney Marvin Mitchelson was no more forthcoming about Mrs. Jagger's divorce action, meeting every question with the comment: "I'm sorry, but I really can't comment. I wish I could but I'm afraid I can't."

The two Soviet Soyuz 32 cosmonauts Monday marked their 92nd day in orbit amid indications that they may be welcoming guests shortly. Soyuz 32 cosmonauts Vladimir Lyakhov and Valery Ryumin were completing the unloading of the Progress 6 cargo capsule and continuing various scientific experiments Monday. The official Tass news agency said Lyakhov and Ryumin took Sunday off and enjoyed a two-way television visit with their families and then watched a special televised concert. Usually well-informed Soviet sources have indicated that as soon as the Progress 6 supply mission is concluded the Soviets plan to launch Soyuz 34 carrying a Soviet commander and a Hungarian engineer toward a docking with the space lab.

Motherhood and full-time wives may resurge in the coming decade, as married professionals find their present lifestyle unbalanced and inefficient, says U.S. author-researcher and feminist Kathleen Newland. Dual professional couples in their late 20s and early 30s are "now detecting a loss of balance. They need someone at home," said Ms. Newland, a senior researcher on human resources at the Worldwatch Institute in Washington, D.C.

The only way around the problem that she sees is for both spouses to compromise their professional pursuits. However, Ms. Newland, who, at 28 is neither wife nor mother, considers this inefficient and idealistic. American women may eventually choose standing over a hot stove to sitting at an office desk — but it should be their own choice, Ms. Newland emphasized.

A spokesman of the Dalai Lama confirmed Monday in New Delhi, Inida, that the self-exiled god-king of Tibet will visit Mongolia in the middle of next month. Kalon Rinchen, personal representative of the Dalai Lama, said the planned visit of the Tibetan spiritual leader "is a purely religious one and should not be speculated on or misconstrued as being for any other reason." Rinchen issued the statement in response to a reported Peking charge that the Soviet Union is working against the return of the "fugitive" Dalai Lama to Tibet.

According to producer Edward S. Shaw, the last social event Richard Nixon will give at his San Clemente estate will be a poolside cocktail reception July 15 for astronauts, commemorating the 10th anniversary of man's first landing on the moon. The astronauts, joined by movie stars and other celebrities, will attend the reception after taking part in Shaw's TV production America's Salute to the Astronauts, in Las Vegas. Nixon is selling the 26-acre estate and buying a smaller — but still luxurious — house nearby, reportedly to ease the workload on wife Pat.

And finally, Anthony Diotte, of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., is not impressed with the odds of winning the Wintario lottery. Diotte had 3,000 tickets for last week's draw but after spending 12 hours checking the six pounds of tickets, he found he had won just $700 and 130 tickets for the next draw. "I don't think much of the odds any more," he said. Diotte, a locomotive engineer for Algoma Steel for 39 years, said he spent much of the weekend checking the numbers. He won the tickets, worth $1 each, about a week ago during an Elks conference near Sudbury, Ont.

Amin aide facing Uganda murder charge

KAMPALA (Reuter) - "Major" Bob Astles, British-born aide to fugitive dictator Idi Amin, has been charged with murder by Uganda's new rulers, senior Ugandan police sources said today.

Moves to extradite him and at least three of Amin's ex-ministers from neighbouring Kenya were ordered Monday by Attorney-General George Kanyehamba, the sources said.

Astles, held by Kenyan police since he fled from the Tanzanian-led forces that toppled Amin last month, would face one count of murder, they said.

He has been accused by Ugandan exiles of helping set up Amin's State Research Bureau, held responsible for many of the mass killings during the dictator's eight-year rule.

Ugandan officials say they have evidence that Astles committed several murders.

Guerrillas ambush Genoese politician

GENOA (UPI) — Urban guerrillas shot a Christian Democratic Party candidate for the European parliament in the legs today just five days before the parliamentary elections, which have sparked violent terrorist attacks.

Police said Enrico Ghio, a former member of parliament and regional counsellor for the Christian Democrats, was shot in an ambush by attackers in a fashionable section of this Ligurian port city.

Italy holds parliamentary elections June 3-4 and balloting June 10 for the European Parliament, the legislative body of the Common Market.

The election campaign for both rounds of balloting has been marked by almost nightly bombing attacks and other urban guerrilla action.

Other terrorist attacks were reported against Christian Democratic party offices at Milan and Tivoli near Rome and a time bomb damaged a labor office in the northern city of Bergamo.

Milan police said a crude bomb made of black powder stuffed into an automobile oil filter and linked to a timing device exploded just after midnight in front of a neighborhood Christian Democratic Party office, damaging shutters and smashing windows.

Police at Tivoli 18 miles east of Rome said attackers fire-bombed the office-residence of former Christian Democratic Mayor Antonio Meschini, slightly damaging the doorway and walls.

They said automobiles belonging to two other Christian Democratic Party officials in the town were severely damaged by fire bombs in separate incidents.

In Bergamo, officers said a time bomb containing black powder blew off the door and destroyed archives in a labor office and shattered windows in nearby apartments and offices.

Britain opens the doors for 1,000 boat people

LONDON (Reuter) - Britain said Monday it will accept almost 1,000 Vietnamese refugees rescued by a British ship in the South China Sea and taken to Hong Kong.

A statement from Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's office said britain will accept responsibility for the refugees taken aboard the Sibonga last week but stressed this is not a general commitment to take similar action in the future.

It said Britain will hold urgent consultations with the Hong Kong government and the international community about the whole problem of refugees from Indochina.

The statement did not say when the refugees from the Sibonga will arrive in Britain.

Glittering catch for fisherman

SHIMONOSEKI, Japan (Reuter) — An amateur Japanese fisherman Monday had one of the better fish stories to tell his grandchildren — combing the sea with an iron bar to fetch some lost hooks he landed a batch of gold ingots.

Police said 43-year-old worker Kazuo Uemura caught some gold ingots weighing 33 pounds on a pier off this city.

Police said the ingots and plates, worth about $90,900 must have been lost by smugglers while they were loading the gold aboard a South Korean fishing boat.

Coastguard officers said the price of gold in South Korea was higher than the Japanese price.

The fisherman gets to keep the story to tell again and again — but police impounded the gold.

The cabinet goes public

It is not often that disagreements emerge from behind the closed doors where the provincial cabinet meets. Decisions may not be unanimous, but all ministers are pledged to support them up to the point of resigning on a matter of principle.

So the present public difference of opinion — it is too limited to dignify as a debate — between several members of the B.C. cabinet over nuclear power is at least interesting for its value as an uncommon curiosity piece.

It is also a useful indicator of the corporate confusion at the top of the government over nuclear power, a rather different picture than the public was shown during the recent election campaign. Then, no one was more decisive than Premier Bill Bennett in rejecting nuclear power. The public was led to believe that the NDP was circulating baseless rumors when it quoted B.C. Hydro chairman Robert Bonner saying nuclear power was inevitable.

Now, it seems no definite decision has been made. The arguing has barely begun. If the public wasn't conned completely in the election, it certainly didn't get the whole truth either.

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm initiated the current controversy when he stated his opposition to a planned nuclear power plant at Sedro Woolley, Wash., only 40 miles south of the border and less than an hour's drive from his Surrey riding. It's slightly farther from Victoria, due east across Georgia Strait.

He presented no conclusive evidence against the proposal, just his and his constituents' aversion to a possible Three Mile Island incident so close to their homes. Prevailing winds would quickly distribute any leaks of radiation over the populous Lower Mainland. In any accident Vancouver would probably suffer more than the people for whom the plant is being built, who live another 100 miles farther south in Seattle.

Vander Zalm says that science ought to be able to develop clean, unpolluting wind and solar power to avoid the necessity of nuclear power plants. That is rather a simplistic generalization, given the unproven and unreliable track record of both the wind and the sun in supplying a steady supply of power at a competitive price.

At any rate, Environment Minister Rafe Mair has chimed in with similar views. He makes clear he is diametrically opposed to Education Minister Pat McGeer, the cabinet's acknowledged expert on nuclear power, who says he can't see anything wrong with Sedro Woolley as long as a Canadian CANDU reactor is used.

Energy Minister Jim Hewitt backs McGeer. He says nuclear power is inevitable, even for B.C., and he doesn't blame the U.S. because it has no other possible sources of power.

Give people a choice between no electricity and nuclear power, and they'll choose nuclear power every time, according to Hewitt.

That must stand as the most fatuous remark to date of the brief controversy. Give people an either-or choice between freezing in the dark and maintaining their standard of living and of course they'll choose the latter.

The statement is as extreme as some of the anti-nuclear lobby's scare propaganda.

Surely answers rather than rhetoric are needed. What alternatives are there? What are the dangers of a nuclear plant? How great are the energy needs?

There needs to be a thorough airing of the issue — perhaps a royal commission — before B.C. can consider saying yes or no to nuclear power.

Going too far

Victoria Real Estate Board president Bev Highton raises an interesting philosophic point when he questions the growing tendency of municipalities to make developers pay the off-site costs of their new residential developments.

Highton points out, quite correctly, that the net effect of these costs — municipal charges for such items as sewer extensions and park development in new subdivisions — is to increase the price of housing. Although the municipalities' idea is that the developers should pay these costs, in fact, the developers simply pass them on to the buyers of their new homes. In effect, the municipalities are making it more difficult and costly than it need be for people to buy their own new homes.

Yet before anyone should argue that these off-site charges should be abandoned, the question must be asked: what is the alternative? If the new home-buyer doesn't pay for sewers and parks in his neighborhood, who will?

There's only one answer: the municipality.

And since the major source of revenue for the municipalities is the property tax, it will be the existing property owners in each municipality who will end up paying for sewers and green spaces for the new subdivisions.

In other words, those who have already bought their property in a municipality will be subsidizing those who are trying to buy theirs. That seems even less fair than having the new home-buyers themselves pay for all the costs of their homes.

The real estate industry makes a good point when it says municipalities should not burden developers and new home-buyers with extra costs caused by inefficient bureaucracies. It goes too far, however, in suggesting the municipalities should subsidize the real costs of those new homes.

What to do with Amtrak?

Secretary of Transportation Brock Adams thinks it's to cut service by 43 per cent, at a projected savings in the necessary federal subsidies of about $300 million a year.

To critics of this proposal, that's like the old Vietnam story of destroying an enemy village to save it.

Both sides insist, fortunately, that the nation simply cannot afford to let rail passenger service go out of existence, because of the growing uncertainty about oil supplies for the future and the distinct possibility that Americans may someday have to reduce their reliance on the private automobile.

Subsidies rejected

Adams says he believes that despite all measures to prevent it, the time may not be far away when travel by automobile will have to be curtailed in the United States. If that were to happen anytime soon, the public transportation system could not absorb as much as five per cent of present intercity automobile traffic.

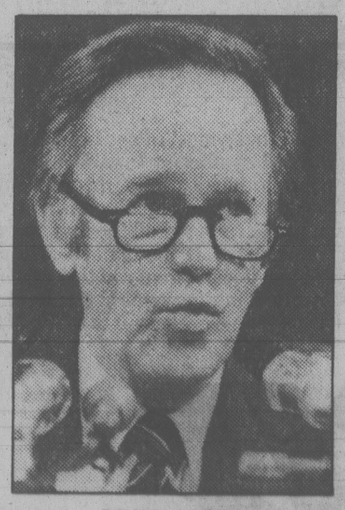

Therefore, he says, a rail transportation system capable of being expanded to meet possible future needs has to be maintained. But in his view, congress will not continue to provide the subsidies required by Amtrak's present scale of operations. To keep a basic, skeletal system operating at a smaller deficit, he believes, the cuts he has ordered have to be made.

They will be, unless one house of congress rejects Adams' plan. And in view of many students of the matter, includng the National Association of Railroad Passengers, Amtrak might not survive the secretary's rescue plan. Some also believe that the plan is based less on congressional resistance to subsidies than on the Carter administration's budget-cutting zeal.

They point out that rail ridership is already increasing — up 7.5 per cent in December, 1978 over the same month of 1977 — despite Amtrak's old equipment and poor service and the abysmal condition of almost all roadbeds. Their view is that the right way to save Amtrak is to build on what's been started, not to cut back.

In fairness, Adams says he also wants to improve service on the routes he would keep, speed improvements in the heavily travelled northeast corridor (Washington, D.C. to Boston), and tie passenger train schedules more closely to those of the intercity bus lines in a more integrated system.

But a study of one of his major recommendations, for the New York

BROCK ADAMS
. . . wants to slash Amtrak

to Florida route, is instructive. Currently, Amtrak runs three trains a day, one to Miami, one to Tampa, and the Silver Star, which splits in Jacksonville and becomes one train for Miami and another for Tampa. All these trains are heavily booked the year round — but the route also runs deeply in the red.

The department of transportation attributes the deficit to the extra weight of sleeping and dining cars, which runs up fuel costs without the cars contributing enough revenue to compensate. But Adam's plan for cutting the deficit is to reduce the three daily trains to one, which he says will accommodate 81 per cent of passenger demand for the new subdivisions. Already, they say, Amtrak is turning away thousands every week.

The department also recommends using lighter Amfleet cars (intended for the northeast corridor) on the Florida runs, but Amtrak contends that this equipment not only is badly needed elsewhere but is unsuited for the long haul route. In its view, Adams' recommendation would only curtail ridership in a market with proven demand and might well increase the deficit per passenger mile.

The transportation department's plan also calls for increased fares in order to improve revenues. But increased fares and reduced service seem more likely to cut patronage as they often have before. The airlines, in contrast, are cutting fares.

Inauspicious start

If Adams is right that Congress will not continue to make up Amtrak's deficit — or if the Carter administration is unwilling to carry the deficit in its budget — there may be no politically possible alternative to the recommended system reductions. But in the face of rising OPEC oil prices and the growing threat of shortages, surely this is an inauspicious time for either congress or the administration to put the Amtrak deficit ahead of the line's ability to attract riders. And to those who believe in the importance of rail passenger service, the real problems are that no administration has ever fully supported it and that congress has kept Amtrak capital starved — unable to make vital investments in new equipment, improved roadbeds, better scheduling and services.

Whether these investments would attract riders in such numbers as to put Amtrak in the black, or close to it, may be doubted. But that the cuts Adams recommends would "save" Amtrak and persuade Americans to ride on it seems even more dubious. And that ought to be the prime objective in the age of OPEC.

". . . would you mind giving this to Joe? . . ."

Shipping history

Regarding the letter, Merchant Marine, (Times, May 14) I would like to suggest that instead of engaging in a flight into fantasy, your correspondent should use a few facts. Canadian Volunteer was built in North Vancouver. I am not certain where Canadian Importer and Canadian Exporter were built; however, while they were sisters, they were not sisters to the Volunteer.

The Canadian government merchant marine was not disbanded because of union trouble; it was disbanded because there was a vast surplus of tonnage with nothing to do. Perhaps Holm does not realize that Canada suffered a bit of an economic depression; as I recall it lasted from probably 1929 to 1940 on the west coast. I think I could safely say it was a world-wide thing.

In 1919, there was a shortage of something on the order of 20 million tons of shipping. In those days that constituted a good many ships; Canada required ships to carry her exports and built them. By the mid '20s the requirement for them had ceased, many of them were idle and the government of the day began to sell them off. By the early 1930s most of them were gone.

Regarding the nonsense about unions, I don't think the large percentage of people that sailed in those ships knew what a union was. The mate hired the deck crews and the second engineer hired the engine room crews. If you signed on a ship for a voyage to Montreal and return, they closed the articles at Montreal and signed the people on at a reduced rate for the return voyage. Unions indeed!

This fleet was not created to provide employment; far from it, it was built to carry exports at a time when there was a shortage of tonnage and when world shipbuilding produced enough new, modern and more economical vessels the CGMM was no longer required and was liquidated, albeit for a vastly lesser amount than was spent to bring it into being.

It is interesting to note that the unfortunate demise of Canada's Second World war merchant marine was accomplished in much the same manner. The unions in this case were a fact of life and were used as a handy scapegoat.

I recall being in a British tramp in the 1920s; she was far from being a yacht. We met the "Canadian whatever" in the Mersey estuary and our crew loudly and derisively called her a "starvation ship" of the "Hungry Rat Line" because of the fact that the powers that set the policy had unwisely, or in their infinite wisdom, decreed that the house flag be a beaver emblazoned on another color that I cannot recall. The Canadian ships left a lot to be desired, no one got wealthy from sailing in them; no one gained much weight during the course of a voyage either. I recently heard that a Victoria man is writing a history of the CGMM. Perhaps Holm should watch out for its publication and broaden his knowledge somewhat. — W. A. Drummond, Duncan.

Thanks, Audrey

Once again the Greater Victoria Music Festival has completed a most successful program. This has been helped in no small way through the efforts of Audrey Johnson who for many years has covered our annual festival most faithfully and efficiently. We especially appreciate her pre-festival full-page spread with its excellent write-up and photographs.

Thank you very much, Audrey — we anticipate many more years of excellent work from you. — Beatrice M. Sutton, Corresponding Secretary, Greater Victoria Music Festival Association.

Prison reform

A few days ago I received a letter from a prisoner in one of Canada's federal penitentiaries. He has lived in a solitary confinement cell in Laval, a maximum security penitentiary in Quebec, for 3½ years. Where were we in December of 1975? Rick Simeneau has lived in a six-by-10 foot cell since that Christmas. He is given a half hour a day exercise.

We have heard a lot from our prisons in the last few years. Once invisible to most of society, they have often come to the attention of the media and the public through hostage-takings, riots, parliamentary enquiries, etc. Obviously something is wrong.

The most severe of our institutions is showing signs of weakness and vulnerability. Unfortunately, even though the prisons are more visible, they are still not really accessible. (It is hard to get into prison, even harder to effect any changes.) Now it may be that the prisons reflect the public's attitudes quite accurately. We certainly seem to think that these people we call criminals should be punished. But what happens when we know what the effects of solitary confinement (sensory deprivation) are? "Complete isolation for a period of three days or more [which] has a demonstrable effect on the deterioration of the functioning of the brain, disintegration of the personality — in effect a process of destruction of personality and mind." (Donald O. Hebb, testifying before the parliamentary subcommittee on the penitentiary system in Canada, 1977.)

Our institutions (educational, penal, marital, financial) have assumed a role of ensuring their own survival (and the jobs of their employees) that is second to none. It is the main function of prisons to ensure their continued use in our society, even when they are out of date and unnecessary. Today they are eminently successful with a return rate of about 80 per cent of their "customers", who were chosen largely from the underclasses.

Now may not be the time when we can release over 80 per cent of our prisoners. (Only less than 20 per cent are considered dangerous by the penitentiary service itself.) Perhaps it requires more careful planning of alternative programs first. Perhaps "reforming" the prisons is out of the question anyway, or even undesirable.

I don't know what Rick Simeneau did to be put into solitary. (I do know he is in prison for bank robbery.) I really don't care. Within the context of the system that exists inside a maximum security prison, it could probably be justified. I don't buy the context anymore. Mr. Simeneau has written to me: "Believe me I am suffering. Solitary has stripped me of my integrity and self-esteem. Aspiration is extremely limited. Gary how many friends have you out there willing to telex the commissioner of corrections, D. R. Yeomans in Ottawa to have me removed from solitary? Public support I need . . ."

This man is only one of many. It is a small gesture considering the magnitude of the problem. But to do what he asks is one way of letting the people in charge of our institutions know that not only do we disagree with their policies, but we also are losing respect for their abilities to effect the dubious results they promise. — Gary Moore, Gabriola Island.

Bolivian mine a hideous monument to 'progress'

By JONATHAN DIMBLEBY
London Observer

The doctor walked through the ward of dying men with that air of detachment which medical men affect before the inevitable. The sad, deferential eyes of his patients tracked him from bed to bed as he explained each case history: Miner, aged 40, advanced silicosis/TB, deteriorating.

The hospital is a short way from the cemetery where last year the town of Llallagua buried 460 victims of the disease which is known in Bolivia as the "mine sickness" — one-tenth of the work force in a mining community where the life expectancy is 37 years.

Llallagua is a wretched jumble of hovels clamped on to the mountain, a raw wound in the black rock of the Andes at 15,000 feet, where the air is so thin that foreigners gasp for breath. Thirty thousand people have settled here around the largest tin mine in the world, Siglo Veinte, which, in translation, means 20th century.

Siglo Veinte mocks the concept of progress. The mine is a hideous monument to the tragedy of a country which depends for survival upon the export of raw material to the industrialized nations; a reproach to the West which determines the price of tin, but which would never countenance for its own citizens the savagery of life which the free market imposes upon Bolivian miners.

The houses in Llallagua are without running water or sanitation. Pneumonia and influenza flourish; TB is endemic; malnutrition rampant. Young children crouch at doorways, straining to relieve the gripe in the stomach which turns to dysentery. Every street is fouled with human excrement.

Almost one-third of the 1,200 deaths in the town last year were children whose fathers could not earn enough to nourish their young bodies adequately and so preserve them against the ravages of disease.

The miners — who account for most of the rest of the deaths — work in the dark warren of tunnels inside the mountain. The air is sour and the temperature varies so sharply that in some parts they work naked, while elsewhere they shiver in thick sweaters. They use antiquated, rusty machinery. After 75 years the mine is almost exhausted: they extract 2,400 tons of rock each day from which they will sift out only 8 tons of tin.

The tunnels reverberate to the harsh chatter of drills, sudden sirens and booming explosions. They are filled with the fine, choking dust that causes a rate of silicosis in Siglo Veinte that is at least five times as high as anywhere in the world.

There are about 6,000 miners who work in and around Llallagua. Two thousand of them are employed by the State mining company — Comibol — which owns Siglo Veinte. Although at least one-in-five of them has silicosis, and the safety conditions in the mine are so primitive that each year there are more than 1,000 accidents, they form an envied elite.

Their privileges include a company house, subsidized food and a regular wage. As the foreman of his shift, Emiglio Serrudo, who is a driller at the face, is paid the top rate — 30 cents an hour, $17 for the seven-day week. According to his union — and Comibol does not seriously challenge its figures — this rate is three times less than he would need to provide his family with that level of subsistence defined by the United Nations as 'minimum.'

Elsewhere in the world, his house would be thought unfit for human habitation. It is part of a long block of concrete rooms which were built for single men: one small room for each, without a window. They now house families; Emiglio, his wife and four children are crammed into the space in which his father had once lived alone.

The cost of Emiglio's subsidized food is deducted from his wage and given in tokens which the family is obliged to exchange at the company store.

Those tokens do not meet the basic needs of the family, but, recognizing this, Comibol obligingly permits its employees to build up debts at the store. These too are repaid by means of regular deductions for rent, health, education, and a pension (which if Emiglio follows his father — a victim of silicosis/TB — will never be claimed). The Serrudos are left with no more than $4.80 a week on which to survive.

It is virtually impossible: the debts mount. It is not uncommon for the survivors of Siglo Veinte to emerge from a lifetime in the mine still heavily in debt to the company. Comibol resolves this problem by deducting the outstanding money from the pension at $7 a week, thus leaving him destitute. And — since he is required to leave the company house on retirement — homeless.

For the majority of the miners who are not "protected" by Comibol, life is even more precarious. They mine old workings or shift the sludge that flows out of the mountain, searching for minute particles of tin which they are obliged to sell to the company.

They are paid only according to the amount of tin they recover. Sometimes, they receive nothing for months at a time. As they have no social security, their families almost starve. Nor can they afford medical care.

For most of the past decade, outsiders have been forbidden to visit the mining areas of Bolivia and Siglo Veinte itself has been under occupation by the Army.

For so long as Bolivia depends on tin — the price of which in the market place is not measured in human lives — the nation will be obliged to spend its slender earnings to alleviate the growing misery of a desperately impoverished people.

Sadat leading Egypt to lonely dead end

THE ECONOMIST

The Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty, reared in the hothouse of President Carter's determination, is wilting in the rigors of an outdoor climate. Virtually all Egypt's fellow Arabs condemn it as a bad Arab bargain; many damn it as treasonable. President Sadat, aggressively defensive, is chucking stink bombs at those very Arabs, the Saudi Arabians, whose influence might have softened the worst consequences of Egypt's isolation. At the same time, he is trying hard to present the treaty as much wider than it is. Quick as a flash, his new ally, Mr. Begin, has chopped it right down to size.

Or even undersize. Israel's prime minister is making it clear beyond any shadow of misunderstanding that the Israeli-Egyptian document is a separate peace treaty, not conditional in any way on what Israel might or might not do to improve its relations with other Arabs. In a radio interview May 2 Begin went out of his way to reassure his domestic constituents that his government would not be doing much: it has no target date for the negotiations with Egypt and America about the "administrative autonomy" of the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza; it will not withdraw from the Golan Heights even in return for a peace treaty with Syria; Jewish settlement in "Eretz Israel" (which for Mr. Begin and his men specifically includes the West Bank) will continue as of divine right. Mr. Begin's leaked proposals for Palestinian self-rule are showing what a poor thing he conceives this to be.

Nor can Israel's renewed bombardment of Palestinian camps in southern Lebanon (including, presumably by mistake, one purely Lebanese village) or its recent large-scale raid into the area in Lebanon held by the United Nations peace force have helped Sadat to explain away his new ally. Even more important, when Sadat, in a doomed effort to prove his Moslem credentials, suggested in a letter to Morocco's King Hassan that the Islamic foreign ministers' congress in Fez this month should be upgraded to a summit devoted to plans for the return of Arab Jerusalem, the Israelis dug the old ground from under him by reiterating, in rather stronger terms than before, that Jerusalem was the eternal, indivisible capital of the Jewish state.

Egypt's exclusion from the Islamic conference hurts. Its effect could be even more damaging than the break with the Arab governments; the Egyptians have never been very enthusiastic pan-Arabists but the great majority of them are devout Moslems and Cairo is the seat of Islam's premier theological authority, Al Azhar University. The manner of the exclusion was humiliating. First, Sadat's lost-hope ploy on Jerusalem. Then King Hassan, too fearful of descending with the Shah of Iran into oblivion to stand by his old but discredited friend in Egypt, told the Egyptian government that if it tried to send delegates to the conference the aeroplane carrying them would not be allowed to land.

The lessons of the Shah's collapse lie heavily on the heads of the Middle East's kings and presidents — except, it seems, that of the man who, in many important ways, resembles him more closely than any other. President Sadat is not alone in being an autocrat, surrounding himself with sycophants and tolerating, even near his family, gross corruption. He does seem to be alone in his confidence that if Egypt has one very good friend — the United States — it can be profligate with all others. Unlike his peers, he has not accepted that the Iranian revolution has, at least for the time being, seriously depreciated the value of America's protective friendship.

The uneasy rulers of the Gulf and elsewhere (a quite unusual quantity of Middle Eastern money is flowing into Swiss bank accounts) do not underestimate their countries' continuing need for good relations with the United States. The Saudis, from whom the others, the Kuwaitis apart, take their cue, have long been alive to the triple dangers of radical neighbors, internal upheaval and Russia's hungry eyes on their oil wells. But this winter they were hit by the fact that there was nothing — absolutely nothing — that the Americans could do to save their very good friend, the Shah.

America's loss of a friendly ruler in Iran, in addition to Sadat's go-it-alone peace treaty, has changed Saudi priorities. The Saudis are no longer as ready as they were once to act against their better judgment, and possibly their better interests, if urged to do so by an American president. In particular, they no longer see cause to be unpopular inside OPEC by holding oil prices down with higher Saudi oil production; indeed they are keeping a lid on production and letting prices rise. They are not impressed by America's role as a less-than-impartial mediator between Egypt and Israel: they disagree with America's perception of the Camp David strategy and they believe that they would be doing no good to themselves or their countries by diguising, with money or words, the divisiveness of Sadat's Israeli policy.

The American expectation, and to a lesser extent the Egyptian one too, had been that the "moderate" Arab governments would eventually fall into line. But one of the odder aspects of the whole business is how remarkably little effort Egypt has made to bring in the other Arab governments concerned or even to present its own case persuasively. Instead, Sadat brusquely told the others what had happened in a take it or leave it manner. They chose to leave it.

On May 1 Sadat doubled his troubles by delivering a scathing attack on the Saudis. The main burden of his charge was to compare the kingdom's current rulers unfavorably with the late King Faisal. King Faisal, he said, had no time at all for Syria's Alawite rulers; his successors, of lesser calibre, had yielded to Syria's threats. Egypt has always been free and imaginative with its abuse; last year, for instance, it discovered that the Saudis were communists in super-capitalist clothing. But the latest attack was personal and touched on Saudi honor, or lack of it. The Saudis, stung out of their customary silence, gave as good as they got. Sadat, their radio and newspapers proclaimed, was a liar, a megalomaniac and had committed treason. And, in response to Sadat's downgrading of Saudi aid to Egypt, the Saudis forgot their usual coyness over figures and announced to the world that Saudi aid to Egypt since 1973 had been $7 billion.

President Sadat's arrogant way with his fellow rulers wipes off on some of his dealings with his own people. It does not make him liked any the better. Informed opinion in Egypt is, by and large, convinced that Sadat is leading Egypt on a lonely path to a dead-end.

The spleen venters

By WILLIAM SAFIRE
New York Times

Most of the political figures I have criticized over the years have redeeming features.

Bert Lance, who may have conspired with candidate Jimmy Carter to finance an election campaign, has loyally refused to avert an indictment by implicating his friend.

Attorney General Griffin Bell, who has thoroughly politicized the Justice Department and has turned the expanding federal judiciary into a Democratic plum tree, is a forthright and likeable fellow.

These men — along with other favorite recipients of attention like Henry Kissinger, Gerry Rafshoon, Ben Civiletti and Tip O'Neill — can and should be excoriated for their political and business sins. All know how to slam back, too, in private and in print. But in taking them on, a critic has a sense of dealing with public affairs professionals and worthy adversaries.

Not so with Frank Sinatra and Leon Jaworski. Last week, in lashing out at this critic, both men revealed a rare combination of pomposity and vindictiveness.

First, Old Blue Eyes. It was pointed out here that Henry Ford 2nd had used Frank Sinatra (who has longtime gangland friendships) to act as a go-between to induce Roy Cohn (who represents gangland clients in court) to scuttle the stockholder suit against Ford. Sinatra's vociferous denial was duly recorded here.

To vent his spleen, Sinatra has taken to financing the mailing of an anti-press tract with his covering letter attacking journalists who "hide behind" the First Amendment, as if he were being put upon by unscrupulous rumor mongers.

To establish the facts of the case that caused the Sinatra mailing, I determined from Henry Ford 2nd that he had personally visited Sinatra before a recent concert in Detroit: purely a "social call." But very shortly after that visit, Sinatra and friends flew to New York and met with attorney Roy Cohn in a restaurant misspelled "Seperate Tables." The names of more than one of those present would ring bells in the organized crime section of the Department of Justice.

I put it straight to Cohn, who was not my original source: What did he and Sinatra discuss? The attorney, a longtime friend, could not duck on a matter concerning my credibility: "The meeting was arranged to discuss an offer to settle the Ford suit," says Cohn, who had not met Sinatra before. "I waited for the settlement offer, but it turned out that Henry Ford asked Sinatra to ask me to take a dive. I told Frank to stop kidding and I went home." That's the story both Sinatra and Ford deny; I think it is rock-solid. For Frank Sinatra to try to cloak his embarrassment in a high-domed attack on the First Amendment is a measure of his pretension.

And now to the sacred cow of the press clips, Leon Jaworski, who made his fame as the special prosecutor of Watergate and let that public trust be used to cloak the Carter Justice Department's cover-up of Koreagate.

Jaworski will not tolerate criticism. A newspaper with the temerity to print suggestions that his official conduct might have been less effective than his publicity gets strange, rambling letters hinting at legal action.

In his latest book (this second squeezing of the grapes was written by Howard Cosell's ghostwriter), Jaworski recounts an episode that perhaps reveals more than he intended.

It was 1974, year of prosecutorial hysteria; I was zapping the special prosecutor, sometimes accurately, sometimes mistakenly, but always alone. Individual targets who could not be charged with a specific crime were being run before a grand jury in order to build perjury cases, a practice no longer permitted by the Justice Department.

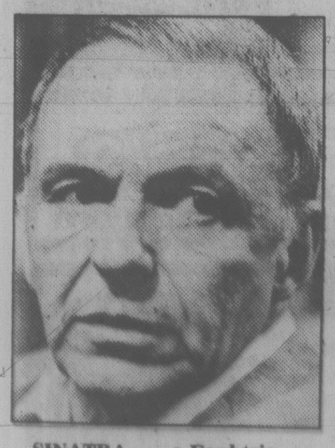

Al Haig, then White House chief of staff (now taking up man-on-horseback riding) cornered me at a reception to cheerily pass along an incredible threat: "Leon says he wanted me to tell you to get off his back, or else."

I was incredulous — after Watergate, could any public official be so heavy-handed? But now, in his memoir, Jaworski confirms his improper pressure. He writes that after I wrote a piece demanding to know why John Dean had not been indicted, Jaworski telephoned Haig to implant this chilling thought: "If Safire has other information, I think I'll just subpoena him before the grand jury."

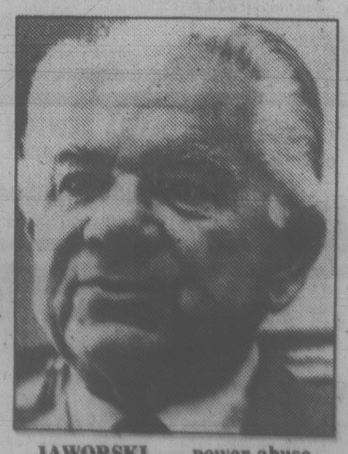

Jaworski is proud of that attempt at intimdation. Here was the prosecutor who was marching men into a grand jury room, indicting them for so much as an "I don't remember," warning a critical newspaper columnist to shut up or he would have to join that grand jury parade, perhaps to jail and ruination.

The arrogant Jaworski does not realize, to this day, that his threat was an abuse of power similar to the abuses he was hired to prosecute. Like John Dean last week, he is still profiting from Watergate, missing the point of its lesson.

That's why I think Sinatra and Jaworski are peas in a pod. When criticized, they go for the throat of the institution that made them celebrities, and they make it difficult for those of us with charity in our hearts to discover some redeeming feature.

A bouquet for top Hollywood florists

By VERNON SCOTT
United Press International

HOLLYWOOD — Frank Sinatra sends his Barbara a dozen yellow roses on special occasions or for no reason at all.

Steve McQueen, although divorced from Ali MacGraw, sends his ex-wife dozens of white daisies in a shiny new garbage pail when she completes a new movie.

Burt Reynolds' bouquets of spring flowers to Sally Fields are accompanied by expensive jewelry in fancy boxes.

All the hundreds of thousands of blooms are purveyed by Flower Fashions, the most successful florists in Beverly Hills and perhaps anywhere else.

The multimillion-dollar enterprise is run by Harry Findley and Fred Gibbons, a pair of middle-aged good old boys from Texarkana, Ark., who arrived in Hollywood broke 21 years ago hoping to become movie stars.

Today the stars are compelled to cry "Get me Harry and Fred" on holidays and when throwing chic parties. In addition to providing floral arrangements, Harry and Fred produce parties on the grand scale.

Harry, a cherubic extrovert, and Fred, his quietly humorous partner, have headquarters in a modest Santa Monica Boulevard shop. Ninety per cent of their business is done on the telephone.

But the other day Cary Grant — one of their biggest customers — and Dionne Warwick, another big spender, stopped by to order flowers.

A dozen long-stemmed red roses costs $47.50. Down the street a dozen roses costs as little as $22.

"The difference is our roses have our name on them," Harry said grandly.

"We also deliver them in my Rolls Royce on Christmas and for other special occasions. We're in the prestige business.

"We're the best and we charge the most. We don't worry about discouraging customers. We have more business than we can handle."

Harry estimates Flower Fashions arranges at least a thousand parties a year costing a minimum of $1,000 for an intimate gathering of six to $1 millllion for a Sinatra welcome home party at Las Vegas' Caesar's Palace hotel.

"Fred and I hand delivered 50 invitations to that party around the world," said Harry. "Twenty-four accepted. We gave an invitation to Princess Margaret.

The cost of a Flower Fashions party does not include liquor, wines nor food. Harry and Fred provide the decor, place cards, flowers, napkin rings, table centerpieces — such as goldfish in enormous brandy snifters — and the like.

The Arkansas boys are privy to more gossip than most scandal sheets. Of necessity they are as discreet about married customers as bordello madams.

Recently a man had Harry make up an extravagant bouquet of white flowers in a white vase for Streisand. The customer then followed the delivery truck hoping to locate Barbra's home. The driver detected the ploy. The flowers went undelivered.

Harry cheerfully admits he could wreck 100 marriages if he opened his books to suspicious spouses.

At the moment, Olivia Newton-John receives more flowers than any other glamor girl. Lucille Ball and Mary Tyler Moore are recipients of flowers from friends and fans almost every day.

Some of Harry's 3,000 regular charge account customers leave a stack of signed cards on file to accompany their floral gifts. Harry signs the names of hundreds of celebrities to blank cards.

The partners are full of inside stories, one involves Roddy McDowall, of all people, who receives a bouquet once a week from a passionate lady in South Carolina.

Television comes to Baie Comeau

MONTREAL (CP) — CBC English-language television came Monday to Baie Comeau and neighboring communities in the remote north shore region of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the corporation announced. At the same time, a new transmitter brings improved radio signals to the region.

The CBC says the Baie-Comeau-Hauterive area has more than 30,000 potential viewers and listeners, about three per cent of them English-speaking.

The corporation's accelerated coverage plan for Quebec is designed to bring English-language service to every community with at least 500 English-speaking residents.

Long press strike going even longer

VANCOUVER (UPC) — Hope for an early settlement in the six-month long Pacific Press strike faded Monday when pressmen withdrew a conditional offer made to the company last week to submit their differences to binding arbitration.

The strike has halted publication of the cities' two daily newspapers, The Sun and The Province, both produced by Pacific Press.

In a joint statement made soon after the pressmen withdrew their offer, Sun publisher Clarke Davey and Paddy Sherman, publisher of the Province, said the company had reached agreement with the Joint Council of Newspaper Unions on all other contractual matters.

The statement said that because the conditions attached to the pressmen's offer to accept binding arbitration would have meant "no significant changes" during the life of the contract, the company could not agree.

"Pacific Press accepted the arbitration concept, but suggested the conditions sought by the union should be left to the discretion of the arbitration board," the statement said.

"The Pressmen's Union rejected this and withdrew its proposal."

No further talks are scheduled.

Among the conditions sought by the pressmen was a guarantee of lifetime jobs for all Pressmen's Union members, regardless of whatever shift staffing changes were made by the company, the statement said.

"The company believes its proposal for binding arbitration offers a basis for final settlement and a return to work by the members of all unions," the statement concluded.

The strike began in November, 1978 when Pacific Press and the Pressmen's Union, then a member of the Joint Council of Newspaper Unions, reached an impasse on the jurisdiction of staffing levels of machine-room shifts.

The strike brought publication of the morning Sun and the afternoon Province to a halt.

Later, through the mediation of negotiator John Kagel of California, the company reached agreement on all contractual matters with the exception of the pressmen's shift staffing issue.

The pressmen withdrew from the unions' joint council and have consistently refused to rejoin the council.

The meeting last Thursday at which the pressmen offered conditional acceptance of binding arbitration, was the first conciliatory move made by the union since the walkout.

It had raised hopes among members of the other unions involved in the dispute that an agreement would be reached, bringing the six-month strike to an end.

Tel bosses voting on union

B.C. Tel managers who kept the system working during a strike-lockout 18 months ago will vote next month on whether they want a union of their own.

The Telecommunications Employees Managerial and Professional Organization (TEMPO) has applied to the Canada Labor Relations Board for certification to represent more than 2,100 B.C. Tel managers.

John Nordgren, chairman of TEMPO's executive committee, said that the union believes its members should choose individually whether they want to cross a picket line in the event of a strike by the 10,000-member Telecommunications Workers Union.

They should also be free to choose whether they would do TWU work or just their own job.

Nordgren said in a recent interview that the strike question is the most sensitive issue TEMPO has faced, but it also is not seeking a closed shop, a condition which would require all lower and middle-management employees to belong to the union.

N-question splits cabinet

Environment Minister Rafe Mair and Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm oppose the plant, while Science Minister Pat McGeer and Energy Minister Jim Hewitt say it is inevitable.

Hewitt said Monday he doesn't oppose construction of the plant at Sedro Wooley because the U.S. has nowhere to turn but to nuclear energy.

Hewitt also agreed with McGeer that nuclear energy will eventually become a reality in B.C. The energy minister said if British Columbians had the choice of no electricity or nuclear power they would choose nuclear power.

Hewitt also said he expects gasoline prices in B.C., now just under $1 a gallon in most parts of the province, will soar to $1.15 a gallon by the end of the year.

He said increasing the price seems to be the best way of controlling gasoline supplies.

IWA starting strike vote today

VANCOUVER (CP) — A strike vote involving 40,000 members of the International Woodworkers of America on the coast and in the southern Interior of British Columbia started today.

The vote will be finished before the master coast contract expires June 15. The southern Interior collective agreement ends June 30, while the northern Interior contract, involving another 7,000 IWA members, expires Aug. 30.

Forest Industrial Relations, which bargains for 120 coastal plants, has been negotiating with the IWA since mid-April and the union is seeking an increase of $1.50 an hour on a base rate of $8.16 an hour, plus cost-of-living allowance.

Gerry Stoney, president of the New Westminster IWA local, said Sunday the strike vote is a "normal thing for us to be doing" in negotiations with FIR.

Donald Saunders, FIR chief executive officer, said key contract talks about the proposed wage increase will be discussed some time this week.

Saunders also heads the Pulp Bureau which began negotiations today with 13,000 workers belonging to two unions — the 7,500 member Canadian Paperworks Union and the 5,500-member Pulp, Paper and Woodworkers of Canada.

The CPU is seeking a 15-percent increase in wages each year in a two-year contract.

Loser in Surrey Denied recount

SURREY (CP) — Provincial election officials denied Monday a request by an unsuccessful New Democratic Party candidate in the May 10 provincial election for a recount of votes cast in the two-member Surrey riding.

Garry Watkins said that the Provincial Elections Act stipulates there be a final count in front of all scrutineers, but this was not done.

He said he was told it was physically impossible in the time allowed to follow the act because of the size of the riding.

Lightning cuts power

ABBOTSFORD (CP) — Power was restored Monday to a wide area of the lower Fraser Valley following an early-morning blackout which apparently was caused by lightning strikes.

The lightning, which accompanied an overnight storm that swept the Greater Vancouver area and then moved eastward into the valley, was reported to have blown about 24 transformers.

Plane crash inquest set

NANAIMO (UPC) — The inquest into the death of six people killed April 19 in a Pacific Coast Airline crash in Nanaimo, on Vancouver Island, will be heard Sept. 5.

Coroner Dr. Michael Smart said Monday he expects the inquest to last two days.

The PCA twin-engine Piper Apache crashed a few minues after take-off from Nanaimo's Cassidy Airport, killing the pilot and five passengers.

Stabbed woman near death

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mohamed Ali Fidai, 46, of Vancouver has been charged with attempted murder after a woman was stabbed 12 times while sleeping.

Police said that Nureu Fidai, 47, wife of the accused, was found in bed Saturday morning with stab wounds in her abdomen. She was in poor condition today.

Cranbrook CUPE votes strike

CRANBROOK (CP) — More than 100 civic workers, members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, were in a legal position to strike Monday.

The union served 72-hour strike notice Friday after a breakdown in contract talks with the city. The workers have been without a contract since Feb. 28.

Drug raid in Langley

MATSQUI (CP) — Four Fraser Valley residents were charged with drug offences Monday after a raid on a house in nearby Langley netted three pounds of cocaine police said was worth $500,000 on the street.

Charged were Theresa Clover, 24, and Sheri Lidvall, 22, both of Abbotsford, and Steven Currie, 26, and Kenneth Smith, both of Langley.

Evicted for sign, tenant reprieved

VANCOUVER (CP) — A city tenant who was given an eviction notice for displaying election signs in his high-rise apartment window said Sunday he has been given a reprieve.

Ted McLaren said the notice from Vancouver Management Ltd. was withdrawn. He had displayed New Democratic Party election signs in his window during the provincial and federal elections earlier this month.

He said he was told of the change by the provincial rentalsman's office, which talked Friday with the management company.

McLaren said he earlier had been told that the election signs violated a clause in the rental contract against business or commerical advertising, but the grounds for eviction no longer exist because the signs were taken down.

The company was not available for comment.

F. W. Woolworth

F. W. Woolworth Co. reported profits in its fiscal first quarter declined 19.3 per cent from a year earlier to $8.8 million or 27 cents a share due to losses from conversion of foreign currency into U.S. dollars. The company, which is fighting a takeover bid by Brascan Ltd. of Toronto, said that excluding foreign currency losses, profits in the three months ended April 30 were up significantly from the same 1978 period. Woolworth said its foreign currency losses totalled $2.5 million or nine cents a share in the 1979 quarter, compared with a gain of $3.1 million or 10 cents a share during the same period last year. Company sales rose to $1.38 billion from $1.23 billion a year earlier. Domestic sales jumped 12.6 per cent as the Woolworth and Woolco Divisions' profits increased "dramatically," Woolworth said. The foreign currency losses came from the conversion of Canadian dollars and British pounds into U.S. dollars, but both Canadian and British operations had improved results in the 1979 quarter, the retailer said.

Turbo Resources

Turbo Resources Ltd. of Calgary reports that sales for the first quarter of 1979 increased 129 per cent and profits were up 149 per cent from the same quarter last year. President Robert Brawn also told the company's annual meeting that the company sold more than 100 million gallons of gasoline in 1978 and expects to sell more than 200 million by 1982 at more than 220 outlets. Brawn repeated the company's intention to apply to the Energy Resources Conservation Board for permission to build a refinery in Edmonton.

CDC

The Canada Development Corp. has reported increased revenue and net income during the first three months of 1979. H. Anthony Hampson, president and chief executive officer, told the CDC's annual meeting that consolidated revenues reached $448.2 million, compared with $206.7 million in the same period in 1978, while net income was $19.1 million, compared with $8.1 million for the same period the previous year. The company said in a news release that a substantial portion of the expanded sales volume resulted from new operations. Petrosar, which was not at a commerical operating level in the first quarter of 1978, accounted for $147.1 million in revenue in the first quarter of 1979. The electronics division, which was added during the second half of 1978, raised consolidated revenue by $23.5 million. The earnings, after payment of preferred dividends, represented income of 48 cents a common share, compared with 12 cents in 1978.

Bristol City's lesson enjoyed by all

The visiting Bristol City team defeated the Vancouver Island Soccer Team All-Stars (VISTAS) 8-3 before 1,500 fans in a match that was highlighted by wide-open play, crisp shooting and some fine saves by the goalkeepers.

It was the second win of a North American tour for Bristol City who earlier edged Seattle Sounders of the North American Soccer League 1-0 and tied 1-1 with Vancouver Whitecaps.

Manager Alan Dicks, the longest-serving manager in the First Division and who has kept his club in the top echelon for 11 years, said he thought it was an entertaining exhibition considering the fact that his club was playing its 60th game of the season.

This season Bristol City finished with a 15-17-10 record for 40 points and a 12th-place finish.

"The Island team showed some ability and good effort," he commented. "Sixteen of our 18 players got into the game and that's what a trip like this is for."

Then he added:

"I wish we could have a few more eight-goal games at home."

Bristol took over almost from the start with Tom Ritchie, one of the club veterans, dominating the show with three goals.

Kevin Mabbutt scored two for the visitors while Dan Lomas tallied for VISTAS on a header as Bristol City took a 5-1 lead at the intermission.

Three of the visitors' goals came in as many minutes. Mabbutt, an English under-21 international, opened the scoring at 16 minutes, Ritchie headed in the second goal a few seconds later and Mabbutt scored again after a fine passing display less than two minutes later.

Brian Robinson scored on a rebound for VISTAS eight minutes into the second half and then set up Bobby Duncan, off a free kick, for VISTAS third goal.

That brought the tally to 5-3, but any hope of a further rally soon was dashed as Bristol City regained its composure and control.

Reserve winger Sean Penny put the game away for keeps when he scored at 70 and 77 minutes and on a penalty shot on the game's final play.

Steve Akam of Oak Bay played the first half in goal for VISTAS with Ted Van Waes of Vikings in the net for the second half.

Dicks suggested that Penny, 21, and a former English schoolboy international, might have a chance to break into the Bristol lineup next season.

"We are losing one or two players to retirement," he said, "and we have several excellent reserves, including Penny, ready to step up."

To the Sonics and 'DJ' for a job nearly done

From here and there:

And Seattle SuperSonics are again the darlings of the maples and this time shouldn't be denied a National Basketball Association championship . . . after being fortunate to get by Phoenix, they now lead the champion Washington Bullets, are playing well and, most important, have the home-floor edge . . . and there's a vote here for Dennis Johnson as one of the finest defensive players in the game . . . and that's a highly important commodity in a sport where offense so often predominates and, in this book, is the key to the success of the Sonics.

★ ★ ★

There was a story last week that defenceman Serge Savard of the Montreal Canadiens headed the National Hockey League's free-agent list, indicating perhaps that he may be open to offers . . . but perish the thought . . . although technically speaking he is a free agent, don't bet he'll go elsewhere . . . if he hasn't already, the best odds are that Savard soon will be offered a healthy new, long-term contract by the Canadiens befitting his status as the best hockey player who never has been named to the all-star team . . . he is his own agent . . . And the other news out of Montreal is that Jacques Lemaire is toying with the idea of playing in Switzerland next season . . . toying is the key word . . . for he is another on the Canadiens' list of non-conspicuous help who produces more than realized . . . for example, Lemaire had 11 goals and 12 assists during the NHL playoffs and took 88 of the 140 faceoffs in which he participated . . . the Canadiens, it may also be noted, took 207 of the 372 faceoffs in the five-game final against the Rangers. Walt Tkaczuk was 44 for 112 and Phil Esposito 45 for 106 . . . or which is just another illustration why the Canadiens are so tough down the stretch.

★ ★ ★

There was a caller, too, who asked what was behind the story of the rumored death of former NHL referee Red Storey. Well, the story wasn't true but how it came about is a tale worth telling. It seems that the incorrect information came about when Red Fisher of the Montreal Star decided not to print a story he had written and sent word to the composing room to that effect. "Red's Story is Dead" one compositor yelled to another. Someone overhead the message and immediately rushed to the phone with what he thought was the news. Obviously he had misinterpreted the message. But the damage had been done, soon it was all over town and eventually got back to Fisher. Hestitantly, he phoned the Storey residence to ask if it was true. The man who answered the phone said it wasn't. Definitely!

★ ★ ★

And here's one for the fivepin bowlers to ponder over during the off-season. Every bowler knows, or should, that hitting the headpin is the name of the game, but by how much does that really improve the score may be the question. Well, perhaps it has been answered. In a recent study it was found that the 215 average bowler hit the headpin six times, the 230 bowler, seven times, and the 250 bowler, eight times . . . and most 180 average bowlers should agree that their problems stem from the fact that only four times out of 10 do they get the ball down the middle . . . simple, wot? But aren't all games?

★ ★ ★

Tote systems are forever changing for the better — and also to handle more money — and the Cloverdale harness track next fall will have one of the most modern. One of the major improvements at the new plant being constructed there will be the "4-Way Duplex Computer System" which will be capable of selling any type of ticket and has been described as the most up-to-date totalisator system in Western Canada. A new tote board is also being installed with win-place-show pool totals for all starters complete with an electronic timer that will post the elapsed time of all races electronically in fifths of seconds . . . a la Exhibition Park, I suppose. All facilites are also being upgraded with individual seats with armrests, yet, to replace bench seating, as one of the many new features.

With armrests? My goodness. What will a poor Sandown punter think?

Rocks out-gun T-men in best output of year

By BILL WALKER
Times Staff

Victoria Shamrocks got back on track — even if it was on a sometimes wobbly footing — in Western Lacrosse Association action against Nanaimo Timbermen at Memorial Arena Monday night.

The Irish ran up their highest goal production of the season as they scored their first win of the year over the Timbermen, 15-10, broke a four-game losing streak and vaulted all the way from the cellar to a tie with the Timbermen for third place.

All that in just one game, but one they dearly needed.

And they will have a chance to move even higher, into second, that is, when they meet Coquitlam Adanacs at Memorial on Wednesday in the second of their heavy schedule of three games in four nights.

The third test will be against Nanaimo in Nanaimo, Thursday.

Monday's game was one in which neither team really played their best with any edge going to the Rocks in the first period. That decided everything.

The Shamrocks threatened to run the Timbermen out of the building in that period as they spotted the visitors a 1-0 lead and then ran up an 8-2 lead.

But just as quickly, the Rocks appeared to lose their concentration with the start of the second period.

Soon the Timbermen were closing in and it was 8-5 before the Irish recovered. From then until the end it was a fairly evenly played but with a touch of chippiness creeping in.

But this was perhaps predictable in view of what had gone before — former Rocks Ron MacNeil and Doug Angrove going to the Timbermen and Jim Lynch and Bob Cool of the Timbermen coming to the Rocks. There was some feeling evident.

Meanwhile, of course, the Kevin Alexander case is still unresolved. The Rocks want Alexander who belongs to the Timbermen and the Timbermen will only give him up on their terms.

Thus, the players had to get a few things off their chests, and did, with the third period degenerating into a penalty parade with MacNeil and Norm Baker of the Rocks the principal culprits.

Both were eventually banished.

The rucus started when MacNeil took Baker into the boards and Baker retaliated. This resulted in minors and, when the boasting took over in the penalty box and further trouble seemed imminent, the officials waved them both off.

The Shamrocks got their edge through the power play, scoring no less than five goals with the extra man.

Rick Baker led Shamrocks scorers with four goals, two coming on the odd-man situation. Ranjit Dillon, Steve Buckley, and Jim Lynch got the other power-play goals while Dillon got a shorthanded goal and contributed four assists.

Nanaimo had two power play goals through Ron Sage and Mike Walsh and also two shorthanded goals by former Shamrock Doug Angrove.

Angrove was a particular thorn in the side of the Rocks. He scored four goals, all four of them being unassisted which must be a record of sorts.

Lynch and Bill Marechek each had two goals while others were scored by Gerry Cadwallader, Bob Cool, Larry Bell and Dave Thomson.

Gord Racette scored two for the Timbermen with and Jack Kasteline a single. MacNeil was limited to two assists.

The Timbermen bore the brunt of the penalty parade, being whistled for 62 minutes including the two 10-minute calls to MacNeil and a misconduct to Ken King.

The Shamrocks had 46 minutes including Norm Baker's double 10.

The latest chapter in the Alexander saga is a proposed eight-player trade with the Rocks to throw in a bundle of cash as well.

The deal would have Alexander, Kasteline, Tej Labh (who is sitting out the season at present) and Jim Guerin coming to the Rocks and Larry Bell, Steve Buckley, Jim Gow and Gerry McKenna going to the Timbermen.

McKenna played for the Shamrocks last year but is working in Prince George at present and what his availability would be is not known.

The cash is believed to be in the neighborhood of $7,000.

However, the only thing certain Monday was that the Timbermen hadn't heard if the Shamrocks were interested in the deal and the Rocks were awaiting another offer which hadn't come at game-over time.

The saga continues.

Fredrickson dies in sleep

TORONTO (CP) — Hockey Hall of Famer Frank Fredrickson died in his sleep Monday. He was 84.

The Winnipeg-born veteran of two world wars had been a life underwriter in Vancouver from the early 1930s until his retirement 15 years ago and had resided in Toronto for the last year.

Fredrickson, a centre, turned professional with Winnipeg Falcons in 1913 and was captain of the Winnipeg team that won the Allen Cup, emblematic of senior hockey supremacy in Canada, and the 1920 Olympic title at Antwerp, the first time hockey was included in the Winter Olympic program.

He signed the same year with Lester Patrick's Victoria Aristocrats (later to be renamed the Cougars), who defeated Montreal Canadiens for the Stanley Cup in 1925 but lost the next year to Montreal Maroons. He was in the National Hockey League for five seasons, playing with Detroit, Boston and Pittsburgh.

He later coached at Princeton University, the Royal Canadian Air Force team during the Second World War and the University of British Columbia. He was inducted into the Hockey Hall of Fame in 1958.

A pilot fighter during the First World War, he was a flying instructor in the RCAF during the Second World War.

Fredrickson received the Order of the Falcon from the government of Iceland for his work in charting schools of fish for that government's commercial fishing industry.

Legion must tag 'Runners

Esquimalt Legion will be at full strength for the first time this season when they meet Richmond Roadrunners in a Western Major Junior 'A' Lacrosse League game at Esquimalt Sports Centre tonight at 8 p.m.

And they may need all the help they can get.

The Roadrunners are the runningest team in the league, as the name would imply; they are only four points behind league-leading Burnaby Cablevision and they lead the Legion by two points. And they have to be caught.

Even general manager Bob Reid of Legion is impressed with the visitors. "They have to be the most exciting team in the league," he says.

Chynoweth now owner

He told a news conference he tendered his resignation, effective June 30, to become part owner of Calgary Wranglers.

Jim Morley, Wranglers owner, declined to specify what percentage Chynoweth acquired in the team, but said "it was more than 25 and less than 50."

The amount paid was withheld.

"I think the opportunity to attain ownership of a major junior franchise along with the new challenge were the deciding factors in my decision," Chynoweth said.

Chynoweth, who was president for 7½ years, also becomes league governor and Calgary general manager, a spot vacant since last January.

WHL governors will convene in Montreal June 11 as part of a special meeting of the Canadian Major Junior Hockey League and attempt to find a successor.

Chynoweth was also president of the CMJHL, the umbrella organization of junior hockey.

Wranglers coach Doug Sauter will continue with the club for next season, officials told the news conference.

Meanwhile, Lethbridge Broncos of the WHL are in the market for a new coach.

Ginnell, owner-manager-coach of Victoria Cougars from 1973-77, directed the Broncos to a second-place finish during the 1978-79 season with a 37-28-7 record. The 37 wins were the most ever by a Bronco team.

The Broncos reached the playoff semi-final but lost out in a round-robin series with Brandon Wheat Kings and Portland Winter Hawks.

No successor to Ginnell has been named. The new coach will be the fifth in six years since the Broncos moved here from Swift Current.

Ginnell is not moving to Medicine Hat to coach. He said he simply bought into the team for his own security and although he is part owner of the Tigers he is not the coach.

Longshot players enjoyed the action

The form players had their moments at Sandown Harness Raceway on Monday, but actually it was a night for Longshot Louie and his pals to savor the most.

For the purists, there were payoffs such as Dusty Mood ($3.00) in the first, Bangor Scott ($2.90) in the fourth, Little Pence ($4.00) in the sixth and Flamingos Pride ($4.90) in the eighth.

All figured and ran like the good things they were supposed to be.

Then there were the surprises.

Open Range ($10.60) and the 30-1 shot Anderson Bonnios started it in the second with an $817.80 Exactor.

Anderson Bonnios was so lightly regarded that there wasn't even one show bet registered on him while only three players shared in the Exactor bonanza.

Sandown, Ex-Park racing on page 31

After that there were such healthy Exactor returns as $93.70 in the third, $77.50 in the seventh, $89.30 in the eighth, and a double payoff $47.80 and $141.10 in the ninth when Marcus Cash and Nevele Solicitor dead-heated behind Senga Lark ($40.30).

To top it off there was an anti-climactic return of $322.60 from Baron Romero ($45.80) to Noble Metre in the 10th. And Baron Romero getting off at better than 20-1 was the eyebrow-lifter there.

Hibernians 'own goal' gives cup to Rangers

GLASGOW, Scotland (AP) — The Scottish Football Association Cup final finally produced a winner Monday night.

After two stalemates, Glasgow Rangers beat Hibernian 3-2 in their third encounter, but still needed overtime.

Unfortunately for Hibernian, the winner was an own-goal — Arthur Duncan headed into his own net after 110 minutes.

It was all Hibernian in the opening half. Ralph Callaghan and Gordon Rae both came close before Rae crossed and Higgins moved in to put it home after Rangers' goalkeeper Peter McCloy failed to cover.

When it seemed Hibs would hold their advantage at the half, Rangers equalized with an almost carbon copy of the first score. Tom McLean crossed and Johnstone tucked it in when Hibs goalie Jim McArthur could only parry the ball.

Rangers pressure was persistent and Dave Cooper just failed to make it 3-1, only to have his long-range effort smothered by McArthur. Hibs got an unexpected reprieve with 12 minutes left in regulation time when referee Brian McGinlay, although far behind the play, awarded a disputed penalty.

McLeod made no mistake.

Early in the overtime, McLeod hit the post with a beautiful curling shot. Then McArthur palmed Alec Miller's penalty kick for the save of the game. A minute later, Rangers reserve Gordon Smith had the ball in the net but was ruled offside and set the stage for Duncan's own-goal header.

Sweep for St. Mike's

St. Michael's University School took championship honors in all three groups of the B.C. independent schools track and field meet at Centennial Stadium Sunday.

St. Mikes topped the senior division with 138 points, the under-16 with 118 and the under-14 with 125.

St. George's School of Vancouver was second in the senior division and Shawnigan Lake in the other two categories.

Drew Fennerty of SMU was the outstanding performer in the senior section. He won the 110-metre hurdles in 16 seconds, the 400-metre hurdles in a record time of 58.4 seconds and anchored both winning relay teams.

Robin Baird of Glenlyon set records for the under-16 800 metres (2:02.6) and 1,500 metres (4:26.7).

Team results:

SENIOR — 1. St. Michael's 138; 2. St. George's 121; 3. Shawnigan Lake 96; 4. Brentwood College 53.

UNDER-16 — 1. St. Michael's 118; 2. Shawnigan Lake 102; 3. Brentwood College 88; 4. St. George's 64; 5. Glenlyon 19.

UNDER-14 — 1. St. Michael's 125; 2. Shawnigan Lake 91; 3. St. George's 73; 4. Brentwood College 30; 5. Glenlyon 26.

Inter-Club League Opens Doors to junior players

The Victoria District Golf Committee has had second thoughts and juniors will be allowed to represent their clubs in the Inter-Club League competition for the Willie Park Driver.

Play gets under way Wednesday and there is some irony in the pairings for the first matches, which are listed in the story below, Royal Colwood, the club that fought hardest for the juniors, is without one. Uplands, which had brought in the original proposal, has two — Lanny Sawchuck and Kerry Taylor.

The issue was settled quickly and perhaps properly with the almost-unanimous feeling that "the decision on who represents the club should be the club's business." It was agreed that a maximum of two juniors now can play on a team.

Only one professional may play with each team during a match.

★ ★ ★

The unfortunate conflict between the Cedar Hill Open and the City Intermediate championship had a disastrous effect on the 25-and-under championship. In more ways than one, it might be mentioned.

Only 13 entered the intermediate test since most preferred to play at Cedar Hill. It's a conflict that is not likely to happen again.

Lack of communication also affected the intermediates but it can be reported that Grant Milliken, 76-71 — 147 over Colwood, won the title with a two-stroke margin over Gorge Vale clubmate Stu Holroyd, 76-73 — 149.

★ ★ ★

If a pat on the back is deserved, let it out. Uplands' Jim Taylor, who certainly deserves a handful for his financial and steering support for golf in the district, feels Nanaimo Golf Club members should be commended for their efforts in making the Mid-Island Junior and the Nanaimo Amateur "two of the best tournaments on Vancouver Island."

Not just because the prize tables are loaded, but because of the extras that Nanaimo offers. Juniors playing in the recent Mid-Island event were treated to an excellent meal in addition to a great array of prizes — all included in the modest $8 entry fee.

Taylor's son, Kerry, happened to win the gross with a one-under 71, one shot ahead of Uplands clubmate Mark Callan. Another Uplands junior, 15-year-old Dave Campbell scored 77-13 — 64 to win the handicap trophy.

Because of Taylor, this year's City Amateur will have the greatest prize list ever offered. Still, the entry was rather disappointing. The ones who should be disappointed are the good amateurs who are passing it up.

SHORT CHIPS: It will be a few weeks before Saanich makes a decision on Bill Goldsworthy's replacement as the Cedar Hill pro . . . Deadline for the job's application is Thursday . . . Then the task of sorting applications, which is considerable, begins . . . The BCPGA's annual pro-executive tournament is coming to the Island for the first time . . . It will be played at Victoria June 29 . . . New president of the B.C. Ladies' Association is Grace Moul of North Vancouver . . . Former Canadian Amateur champion Doug Roxburgh married Lorna McPherson in Vancouver last Friday and they'll honeymoon in Great Britain . . . Just in time, it might be pointed out, for Roxburgh to play in the British Amateur.

A flock of hole-in-ones to report: Pete Hoskin, 16, on the 9th, and Lawrie Langford, on the 13th, at Oak Bay; Jack Newnham, getting the one in a 1-2-3 recording with Vic Derman (2) and John McManaman (3) on Gorge Vale's 14th; Gorge member Val Ramsdale, on the 17th, and Lou Johnstone, on the 9th, the first on that hole by a woman, at Uplands; Sam McKenzie, on the 4th during last Friday's seniors' tournament, and Joan Quatch, on the 7th, at Colwood, and Pat Fantillo, on the 3rd at Cowichan . . . Vancouver Island assistants will hold their championship test June 13-14 at Oak Bay . . . Peter Kristolovich and Ellis Langham won the Ray Harrington Trophy at Cedar Hill . . . Jack Stewart and Gord Bremner teamed up to claim the Don Ross Memorial Trophy at Colwood . . . Maurice Frost beat out Ray Cranston for the Todd Cup at Oak Bay . . . Lindsay Allan and Holly Warne (low gross) and Emily Graham and Vicki Kirkham (low net) were the big winners in the South Island women's field day at Gorge Vale.

Pro total trimmed

Victoria's inter-club golf league competition for the Willie Park Driver gets under way Wednesday with one change in the regulations governing the always-fiercely-fought team competition.

Teams will be allowed to use only one professional at one time. Last year, two pros were allowed to join each six-man lineup.

Competition opens with defending-champion Royal Colwood at home to Cedar Hill, Gorge Vale at Victoria and Uplands visiting Glen Meadows.

Matches are to start at 5 p.m.

Cedar Hill at Colwood

Jim Rutledge and Chris Dowds vs Dave Mick and Ron Howard, Jr.

Jim Girard and Greg Barnes vs Bob Hogarth and Mike Mousseau.

Gorge Vale at Victoria

Grant Milliken and Dave Donaldson vs Don Smith and John Hough.

Lanny Sawchuck and Kerry Taylor vs Bill Penny and Marty Richards.

Colwood juniors keep league lead

Colwood defeated Cedar Hill 6½-2½ to run its total to 21 points, 3½ ahead of the second-place Victoria Golf Club squad, which rolled to an 8½-½ victory over Gorge Vale. Uplands trimmed Glen Meadows 8-1 in the other match.

Standings: Royal Colwood 21, Victoria Club 18, Uplands 15½, Cedar Hill 14, Gorge Vale 9, Glen Meadows 4.

MONDAY'S RESULTS

COLWOOD 6½ CEDAR HILL 2½

Bruce Barlow defeated Blair Piercey; Neil O'Leary defeated Dale Broughton. Colwood won best ball.

Peter Ash defeated Doug Brown; Guy Spencer defeated Guy Ellis. Colwood won best ball.

GORGE ½ VICTORIA 8½

UPLANDS 8 GLEN MEADOWS 1

Graham Carlow defeated Ross Anderson; John Oliver defeated Greg Tremblay. Glen Meadows won best ball.

Dave Campbell defeated Guy Hunter; Nancy Callen defeated Tom LeBitter. Uplands won best ball.

Button victory

Eric Ware and George Ferguson of Uplands captured the Victoria District senior golf buttons at Gorge Vale Monday with a 3-and-2 victory over Glen Meadows partners Jim Milbraith and Terry Whittaker.

Fairburn takes Island crown

Ken Wilmshurst of Fairburn School turned in the outstanding performance of the Vancouver Island elementary cchools track and field championships at Centennial Stadium on the weekend.

Wilmhurst ran the 800 metres in 2:11.7, a remarkable time for a 12-year-old.

His time was more than five seconds better than the previous meet record for the distance.

More than 1,000 athletes from Island points took part in the championship meet, which was co-sponsored by the Flying "Y" Track Club and Fairburn School.

Fairburn captured the over-all championship while Ruth King School of Langford won the trophy for schools outside the Greater Victoria area.

Other top individual performances were turned in by:

Linda Martin of North Saanich, who won the 12-year old girls' 200 metres in 30.5 seconds;

And J. Waible of St. Michaels University School, winner of the 11-year old boys' 100 metres in 14 seconds flat.

'Cousjns' are kind to Twins

By Associated Press

Minnesota Twins have found a bunch of "cousins" among the American League's weak sisters.

And just to keep things all in the family, shortstop Roy Smalley, manager Gene Mauch's nephew, is leading the way.

The Twins broke a five-game losing streak Monday by outslugging Oakland A's 10-7. That raised their record against the A's, Seattle Mariners and Toronto Blue Jays, the AL's three worst teams, to 14-0.

In addition, they are 5-2 with Detroit Tigers and 3-2 over Cleveland Indians, giving them a 22-4 log against teams with sub-.500 records. The only winning teams the Twins have played so far are California Angels, Texas Rangers and Kansas City Royals. They are only 4-14 against those clubs.

"All wins count the same," said Smalley, who hit a two-run, first-inning homer — his 10th of the season — and singled home two more runs to cap a tie-breaking, four-run seventh. "They don't put asterisks by the wins over the second-division clubs."

Elsewhere Monday, New York Yankees won in Milwaukee for the first time since 1977 by edging the Brewers 2-1 in 10 innings, Kansas City outlasted Baltimore Orioles 5-4 in 16 innings, Texas beat Boston Red Sox 5-2, Chicago White Sox trimmed Cleveland 6-1 and Detroit downed Toronto 6-2.

In the National League, Bill Robinson and Grant Jackson ganged up on New York Mets once again.

On Sunday, Robinson hit a ninth-inning home run to break a tie and give unbeaten Jackson his third victory as the Pirates beat the Mets 2-1. And on Monday, Robinson hit a run-scoring single in the first inning, a two-run tie-breaking homer in the fourth inning and a double to spark a three-run ninth as Pittsburgh, with Jackson picking up his sixth save, defeated the Mets 6-1.

In other NL games, Atlanta Braves beat San Francisco Giants 4-1, Chicago defeated Philadelphia Phillies 4-1, Cincinnati Reds nipped Los Angeles Dodgers 3-2 in 13 innings and San Diego Padres shaded Houston Astros 5-4. The Montreal Expos and St. Louis Cardinals were idle.

The Twins broke a 6-6 tie in the seventh. John Castino singled home the go-ahead run, Rob Wilfong walked with the bases loaded and Smalley, who also doubled and scored in the third inning, singled home the final two runs. The three hits raised Smalley's batting average to a league-leading .389.

"I've been doing the same things at shortstop for three or four years," he said. "Now that I'm hitting .380, everyone is noticing my defence."

Uncle Gene, however, noticed his nephew's 10 home runs, tops among major league shortstops, and couldn't resist a needle

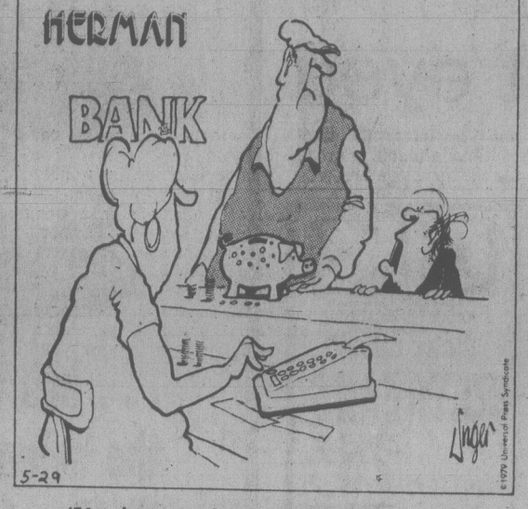

"Ernie Banks used to have 20 at this time," he quipped.

George Brett, who had already hit for the cycle — a single, double, triple and home run — in the first 15 innings, led off the 16th against Sammy Stewart with his second homer of the night and sixth of the year to power Kansas City over the Orioles.

Baltimore had tied it in the ninth on Ken Singleton's opposite-field homer after the Royals had taken a 4-3 lead in the eighth on Brett's two-run homer off Dennis Martinez. Gary Roenicke also homered for the Orioles.

Fergie Jenkins and Sparky Lyle checked Boston on nine hits and Al Oliver lashed a two-run homer in the first inning as the Rangers posted their eighth consecutive triumph over the Red Sox dating back to last season.

It was the third time in as many outings Jenkins had beaten his former team since he was traded back to Texas two years ago.

"You better make sure I get it back Friday."

Combo batters edge Breakers

Esquimalt Combos and VI 90 took different routes to victory in the Victoria Senior Women's Softball League Monday.

Combos came out best in a slugfest with Island Dryland Breakers, 9-8, while VI 90 shut out Capital City Pirates 4-0 behind the four-hit pitching of Sandy Milliken.

Mavis Stokke knocked in the tying runs for Combos with a two-run triple in the fourth inning and then later scored the winning tally.

Linda Newcombe was the winning pitcher while Mo Cockrill had two for four at the plate for Combos. Bea McKenzie had four hits including a triple and batted in three runs for Breakers.

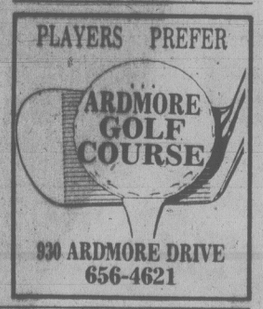

Milliken struck out three and only walked two in her win over Pirates. Diane Daniels, Vera Chiu and Debbie Krantz each had two hits for the VI girls.

Mike Blades hit a home run and drove in four runs as Saints defeated James Bay Inn 10-3 in a Macdonald Park men's league game. Mayfair Insurance defeated Esquimalt Rebels 3-1.

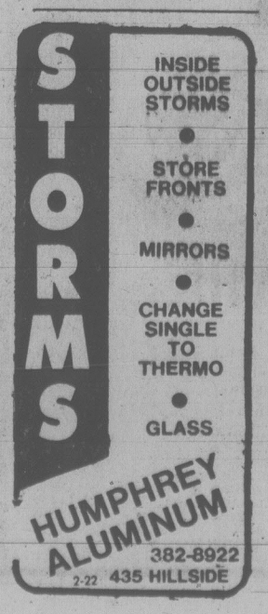

NDP farm land policy 'has remained intact'

The defeat of the NDP by the Socreds in 1975 did little to affect the application of agricultural land reforms, an Environment Canada geographer said Monday.

Edward W. Manning gave a paper on the impact of agricultural land reserves (ALRs) on rural land at the opening session of the annual meeting here of the Canadian Association of Geographers.

Environment Canada initiated a survey in 1977 in which 803 land-owning individuals across the province were questioned.

Manning said that with one or two notable exceptions, which received much publicity at the time, there has been equal application of agricultural land reserves in pre-election and post-election B.C.

But he said there must be vigilance to ensure that this situation continues.

Environment Canada undertook the survey as part of a watching brief on land resources to determine impact and problems of B.C. land reserve legislation, which was new to North America at the time.

Eighty per cent of the 803 surveyed — the same sized sample as used by the Gallup Poll — liked the idea of ALRs, Manning said.

Manning said attitudes of some land owners had changed since the ALR freeze was first imposed.

"People were appalled at first that they couldn't subdivide because for many, it cut off the source of future retirement income."

At the time, buyers could get a country estate for the price of a city house and rural land was depressed.

But then, Manning said, owners and farmers realized they had a valuable commodity, and the market has improved to the point where smaller acreages may command a per-acre bonus.

Offshore government eyed

University of Ottawa geographer Peter Harrison made the suggestion in a session on Marine Studies and Coastal Zone Management at the Canadian Association of Geographers' annual meeting at the University of Victoria.

He described the 2.5 million square miles of ocean in terms of a new province or unorganized territory, not unlike the Canadian west during the 19th century.

The offshore waters are adjacent to the second longest coastline in the world and embrace an area the size of B.C., Alberta, Saskatchewan and much of Manitoba, Harrison said.

"How do we take this new province and give it some existence in terms of management, resources and decision-making processes?" he asked.

One way is to create a single new, mammoth authority encompassing all aspects of policing and management.

Another would be to extend existing departmental jurisdictions. But there must be co-ordination and participation in the setting of policy, Harrison said.

Input to decision-making is critical and the process must consider the imbalance between elite users like major oil companies, and others like independent fishermen.

This might best be done through a regional ocean resources council, whose purpose would be to bring together all client groups and act as a parliament to guide the policy-makers.

"It might be a permanent task force," he said.

Felix Kwamena, also of University of Ottawa, said about 100 federal agencies must be integrated into a continuing planning process for the territorial waters.

Geography meet to hear 270 papers

Delegates include academics, planners, environmentalists, economic, climatic and industrial geographers from Canadian and some from the U.S.

Chairman Dr. C. N. Forward, of the UVic geography department, said 270 papers are to be delivered.

All sessions are open to the public.

Oak Bay cuts zoning height at 2 locations

Oak Bay council gave approval Monday night to a rezoning bylaw which will restrict future building on two corner properties.

The corner of McNeill Avenue and Roslyn Road will be limited to one storey and 25 feet for residential purposes and the southeast corner of Cadboro Bay Road and Estevan Avenue, known as Willoway Shopping Area, will be limited to a height of 15 feet.

Both properties, under the previous zoning, could be three storeys or 30 feet in height.

Mayor Brian Smith said the change was being made to stop a bad scheme from being built in the future.

Council also changed the zoning at the southeast corner of Cedar Hill Cross Road and Henderson Road from the current garage to kindergarten, to be administered by the neighboring church.

Residents of Monterey Avenue, between Brighton and McNeill, were assured there is not now a deadline for them to tell the municipality if they want parking bays installed and that plans for rebuilding the three-block stretch will be presented publicly before being implemented.

Council agreed to resurface that section of Monterey to its present 26-foot width, and not wider as previously proposed, prompting neighborhood representative Barbara Harris to say she is delighted to see Oak Bay stay with the present width.

In another matter, administrator Jim Craven was instructed to check out complaints that a band on one occasion and a disco on another played at rented facilities in Oak Bay Beach Hotel contrary to provincial regulations.

Chinatown rare dome restoration

The provincial secretary's ministry has approved a $5,750 grant to Victoria for the restoration of a rare, stained-glass dome in Chinatown.

The dome on the third floor of the Hook Sin Tong Charity building measures 12 by 15 feet and consists of 20 stained-glass panels, each having a tulip motif.

The Hook Sin Tong building was designated a heritage property by the city in 1977.

The restoration funds come from the B.C. Heritage Trust and the work on the dome will be based on plans drawn by staff of the heritage conservation branch.

The work will be done by John McMillan, the artist who restored the stained-glass in the Legislative Buildings.

Residents first: chief

Songhees Indian band chief John Albany says the band council has agreed to support View Royal residents opposed to a proposal to move oil tanks from the Victoria harbor industrial reserve to Esquimalt harbor.

"We say Victoria should consider residents of Greater Victoria before tourists," Albany said. "Leaving the tanks where they are won't hurt the tourist trade."

Scrap gains tax plan expert urges Clark

OTTAWA (CP) — Many tax experts are convinced Joe Clark's plan to abolish capital gains tax on shares of Canadian-controlled companies is short-sighted and favors the rich, says a Toronto economist.

John Bossons, who specializes in tax reform at the University of Toronto, said in a telephone interview Monday he would strongly advise the new prime minister to scrap the idea.

Bossons says the plan would introduce gross inequities into the tax system. He also maintains its long-term cost is far greater than the Conservatives have acknowledged.

"In summary it would be a very regressive step."

Clark announced the plan in Vancouver shortly before the election campaign. He said he wanted to encourage the public to get their savings "out of socks and into stocks."

The average Canadian stashes away 10 per cent of his income — a much higher proportion than most other nationalities. Clark says his plan would channel some of this money into new industrial growth.

Bossons agrees the abolition of capital gains tax on Canadian equities would lead to an increase in corporate investment. But he believes the costs of the plan outweigh its benefits and says many tax professionals share this view.

"The proposal would create opportunities for substantial tax avoidance by wealthy individuals who can arrange their affairs to take advantage of the exemption," he wrote in a recent article published by the Canadian Tax Journal, a publication for lawyers and accountants.

He said in the interview that the average taxpayer — earning about $20,000 — derives most of his income from his wage or salary. Even if he takes advantage of the new tax break, his participation in the stock market would have to be small-scale.

The person in the $100,000 range, by contrast, is already deriving a large part of his income from capital gains. Being familiar with this type of investment, he would immediately see the tax advantage of further investment and would have the available funds.

The Conservatives have estimated abolition of capital gains tax on Canadian shares would cost the federal treasury about $50 million a year.

Bossons estimates the cost over the next decade at approximately $500 million a year in 1979 dollars.

Although the loss of tax revenue would be small for the first year or two of the program, the government would be forfeiting its access to a source of funds that is growing every year, he says.

The business community has made it clear it supports Clark's plan enthusiastically. Bossons says these same corporate spokesmen opposed the idea of capital gains tax when it was first being considered the late 1960s.

In spite of their objections, then-finance minister John Turner was persuaded that the tax system would be fairer if the government began taxing money made by investors.

The capital gains tax, which has been revised several times since 1971, now is imposed on half of all earnings made by investors, after an initial tax-free $1,000.

Trustees rake own committees

The board's personnel committee, now discussing vice-principal tenure policy, was accused by several trustees of shirking its responsibility to the public by contemplating holding meetings in camera.

Board chairman Carol Pickup explained some meetings might not be held in public because individuals would be discussed.

Trustee Peter Yorke said all committee meetings should by public because the tenure policy will "change the leadership pattern of this district."

"I agree it would be easier to have things behind closed doors; it would be less dicey." Brice said. "But we have a responsibility to the public. I don't think the board should stand for it."

Young said if the committee voted to conduct meetings privately he would have to go along with he decision, even if he didn't agree with it.

According to Yorke, the tenure issue has never been discussed in camera and there is no reason for the committee to start private talks now.

But Pickup said some matters must be discussed privately.

"I personally feel that since this is a rather serious issue, in order to have open, frank, honest discussion it is necessary many times to hold meetings in camera."

"You can say what you like and the public will never know. I am violently opposed to it," Yorke said.

Trustees also took the opportunity to attack the work of other committees.

Glyn Williams said he was unhappy with the student review committee because discussion of suspension policy has been delayed five months.

Some students are suspended for three weeks and many as long as five weeks, Williams said.

Young said the suspension issue is top priority because students are being penalized unjustly.

"It is clear as anything that some of these students are mentally ill or emotionally ill or victims of circumstances beyond their control."

Young said in this district last year, 414 students were suspended for up to five days, compared with 31 similar suspensions in another large district he did not identify.

Suspensions for periods longer than five days were handed out to 41 students.

This year 388 students have been suspended for up to five days and 31 for more than five days, he said.

His statistics were not challenged by schools superintendent Allan Stables or other trustees.

Young suggested the board create creative and imaginative recommendations for principals to follow as alternatives to suspension.

"When we put them out of school they end up on somebody else's list."

Next to criticize was trustee Mark Fisher who said he was disappointed in the personnel and the planning committee.

The personnel committee hasn't put forward one acceptable recommendation since it was set up, Fisher charged.

Fisher is a member of the planning committee and he accused that group of "wallowing in the eccentricities of a philosophic view of planning and personnel."

The bidding:

This deal was played many years ago in the Intercollegiate Bridge Championship. It contains a type of play that is easy to miss. West led the ace of clubs, hoping to put East in the lead later on to obtain a club ruff. He next played a low diamond, taken in dummy with the ace as East signalled with the nine.

From this point forward, the spotlight was on declarer. Most Souths, conscious of the danger of a club ruff, led a trump and rejected the finesse. They went up with the ace and returned the ten.

Alert defence now defeated the contract. West won the ten with the king and led a second diamond. East took the king, returned a club, and West ruffed to put declarer down one.

However, many other declarers made the contract in a perfectly legitimate way. They realized that only a club ruff could stop four spades, and they took the appropriate action to forestall the ruff.

At trick three they led the king of hearts from dummy and discarded the jack of diamonds! In effect, they traded a sure diamond loser for a non-existent heart loser.

This unusual exchange of tricks produced the desired effect. West took the heart king with the ace, but found that his line of communication with East had been severed. There was now no way to stop South from taking ten tricks.

The king of hearts play used by the successful declarers is sometimes called the "coup without a name." It is an entry-destroying play.

With or without a name, the play can be very effective in the right circumstances. It is certainly not a difficult play to execute. All you have to do is think of it!

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 19): This can be a power-play day. Involvement, style, creativity, commitment to ideal, profession, purpose or person is highlighted. Capricorn, Cancer persons — and the number 8 — figure prominently. Member of opposite sex "swoons"!

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Study Aires message, protect turf. Take a stand. Be "creatively selfish." Finish what you start. Aid those who are serious, willing to help themselves. But say, "No!" to those who take, take with no thought of giving anything in return. You'll understand!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent on ideas, trips, relatives and special calls or messages. You can make marvelous, new contact. You could also learn the meaning of love. Leo is part of exciting scenario. Be independent, not arrogant.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on protecting possessions, payments, collections, locating what had been lost, missing or stolen. Follow through on hunch. Pay heed to "teacher." Cancer, Leo, Aquarius persons play prominent roles.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Answers are available — and obtainable. You get what you want; cycle is high, judgment and intuition are "in the groove." Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. You will have reason to celebrate!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Confinement, restriction, temporary loneliness can actually reinforce aspirations, goals. Get second emotional wind. Know that you are due for a remarkable comeback. You'll gain strength — and spiritual sustenance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Analyze, piece together information, clues — you can come up with complete story. Reward factor is strong. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure in scenario. You win friends, influence people and feel magnetic pull towards member of opposite sex.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accent on home, adding to dimension of life style, beauty, family harmony, diplomacy. Prestige, promotion, communicating with superiors — these also are on agenda. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure prominently.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Define terms, check sources, read between the lines. Obtain hint from Scorpio message. Travel, communication, advertising, publishing comprise part of overall picture. Someone, from your past, will play significant role due to "reappearance."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Refuse to be intimidated by one who claims to have all answers. Hold on to possessions. Keep financial files confidential! You could receive promotion — you gain prestige and could find or rediscover love.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emphasis on declaration of principles. You learn where you stand, how to elevate position. Finish what you start. Deal with Aries, Libra persons. Spotlight on contracts, partnership, joint efforts, public relations — and marital status.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Accent on new start, "different" employment conditions, rules for better health, getting together with one who shares basic concerns. Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently. Later, you will be showered with affection!

Cullen blames the charladies

OTTAWA (UPC) — An error by parliamentary cleaning staff forced Immigration Minister Bud Cullen to sort through garbage at a local dump for personal papers and confidential documents mistakenly discarded, the outgoing Liberal cabinet minister says.

The mistake was noticed when Cullen's executive assistant, Nicole Chenier, realized some of her personal papers were missing but a rainstorm cut short a search in a gravel pit 20 miles west of Ottawa.

"I went out there personally because some of the documents were personal documents, personal papers," Cullen said Monday after an Ottawa newspaper — The Citizen — reported seeing the minister plowing through dumped garbage.

"I told security that that stuff should be shredded, or burned or turfed under or whatever. But, there's nothing there that is unduly sensitive.

"When I went out there, we got the personal papers. Security got anything they thought was necessary. I say necessary in that they would take it back and shred it as opposed to burn it at the dump," he said.

Cullen, Chenier and staff returned to the dump Saturday sorting through garbage looking for personal papers including topics such as Chenier's divorce, mortgage papers and bank statements.

The confidential papers included 1976 letters between Cullen and former Solicitor-General Warren Allmand about the RCMP working with Revenue Canada to investigate organized crime. The letters were the basis for testimony before the McDonald Commission into RCMP wrongdoing.

And, now: Good Queen Don . . .

OTTAWA (CP) — Don Jamieson compared himself Monday to Queen Elizabeth II and former Newfoundland premier Joey Smallwood to British King Henry VIII.

Jamieson, the new Newfoundland Liberal leader, who had his differences with Smallwood in the past, replied:

"I'm his heir in the sense that the current Queen Elizabeth is the heir of Henry the Eighth. In other words, his government is a long way back."

Smallwood led the party for nearly 30 years both before and after entry into Confederation in 1949.

B.C. union men charged

WINNIPEG (CP) — Three British Columbia delegates to the national meeting of the Canadian Association of Industrial, Mechanical and Allied Workers (CAIMAW) were charged Monday with assaulting police officers.

The charges arose from an incident Saturday when CAIMAW members staged a demonstration for a small group of workers on strike since 1976 at the Griffin Steel Foundries Ltd. plant in the Transcona area of Winnipeg.

Seven persons were arrested by police, who said about 90 people congregated near the plant entrance and interfered with workers entering and leaving the premises. Only three of those arrested were charged.

Katherine Elizabeth Walker, 29, of Burnaby, and Roy Charles Cabot, 32, and Harold William David, 38, both of Vancouver, all were released on $250 bond. David also was charged with obstruction of justice.

The pickets were protesting the use of non-union labor at the plant. CAIMAW members struck the plant Sept. 19, 1976, and police have since made more than 375 arrests, mostly for picket-line incidents.

The company hired new workers soon after the strike began. Some strikers eventually returned to their jobs, but most found work elsewhere. Normally, there are at least three pickets in front of the plant each day, but the picket line swells on anniversary occasions.

Multi-faceted Forsey retires

OTTAWA (CP) — Eugene Forsey reached Senate retirement age Monday and the country's ranking constitutional expert says, all things considered, it's probably a good thing.

"I'll be sorry to go but I would rather go while the signs that I am going downhill are not as visible to other people as they are to me," he said in an interview a day before his 75th birthday.

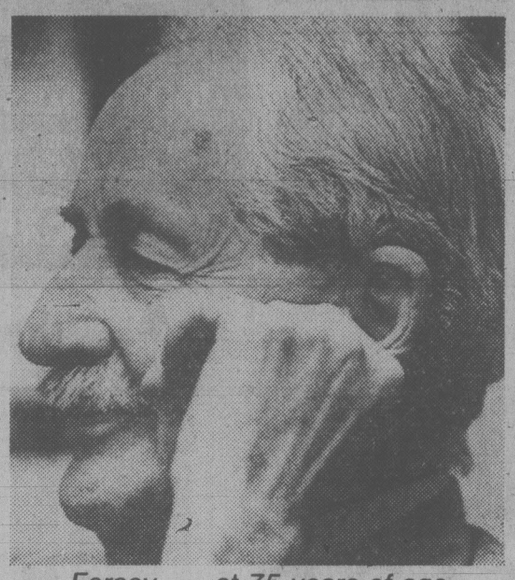

Forsey's career has spanned the political spectrum as he became known as a leading authority on the British North America Act, which serves as the country's underlying law.

Forsey was appointed to the Upper Chamber in 1970 by Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau. Ironically his political affiliation had begun with the Conservatives under Arthur Meighen in the 1920s.

When Meighen was deposed by the party, Forsey, a young Rhodes Scholar, returned from England to become an enthusiastic convert to the socialist theory that created the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation.

But the outspoken academic broke with the socialists in 1961 over what he called a "two-nations" concept adopted by the New Democratic Party, the successor to the CCF.

He supported Trudeau's 1968 party leadership bid because he believed that his long-time colleague's approach to the question of national unity was sorely needed by a new federal government.

Forsey . . . at 75 years of age

He has called himself a Liberal ever since.

Asked Monday what the biggest problem facing the country is, Forsey said emphatically "holding the real country together, not just a splash on the map."

"A real country with a central government and Parliament able to do real things for real people," he argued was the key to national unity.

Characteristically, he spoke his mind on the Pepin-Robarts Task Force on National Unity, which he labelled as "a perfectly horrid document."

He said he was frightened of a trend towards province-worshipping.

The Pepin-Robarts report contained a number of recommendations, including one to replace the Senate with a House of The Federation, which were "absolute subversive balderdash from start to finish."

Forsey admitted that he once was among those calling for abolition of the Senate. But he says he decided to accept Trudeau's appointment because he came to realize belatedly that abolition was not a practical idea.

He now is an ardent supporter of the Upper Chamber.

He listed several recent developments which he thought bore a good omen for the future.

The economy was on the mend, a fact which would deliver many beneficial side-effects. The new Conservative government would have to be on its toes to "behave with the utmost fairness and generosity towards Quebec" and would likely receive support from a sensitive Liberal opposition.

As for his immediate plans, Forsey will go to work on a number of personal projects.

The constitutional debate will continue to receive his attention as will a number of "foolish things" recently written that he has not yet protested about.

Forsey has turned down many speaking engagements since January because his wife has been in poor health. But he says he will watch the political scene with a great deal of interest and will not be reluctant to speak out.

Enough cash to survive

OTTAWA (CP) — In one of their last functions, the Liberals have made sure that the government has enough money to get through the month of June.

The Canada Gazette released Monday shows that the government of Prime Minister Trudeau has approved the expenditure of about $1.806 billion on certain day-to-day operations for next month.

The new Progressive Conservative government of Joe Clark, which takes over Monday, will have the responsibility of approving this needed money on a monthly basis until Parliament meets in September or early October.

The voting of certain funds by the cabinet through governor-general's warrants was made necessary by Trudeau's haste in calling an election March 26. The Commons had started voting on government spending plans when Parliament was dissolved to permit the May 22 vote that saw the Liberals tossed out of office.

Had he not been in such a hurry, the Commons probably would have approved $6 billion in planned spending, including the final allocations for the financial year that ended March 31 and the first slice of more than $52 billion earmarked for the current fiscal year.

About half of total government expenditures must have Commons approval at some time or other. The spending under warrants has to be approved by MPs retroactively.

Since last March, the cabinet has approved a total of $5.570 billion in spending through the warrants.

$500,000 theft of gold ore has Quebec police baffled

JOUTEL, Que. (UPC) — Police were left with few clues Monday after two armed men escaped with $500,000 worth of unrefined gold ore during an early morning raid at a mill in this remote northwest Quebec community.

"They got away with a batch of precipitate from a mill," said administrator Laurin Bellanger of the Agnico Eagle gold mine 800 kilometres north of Montreal.

"I don't know how they got in but the police are conducting their inquiry," he said Monday night.

Police said the masked pair arrived at the Agnico Eagle gold mine in a stolen truck at 4 a.m.

The gold was contained in a mixture of 700 pounds of mud which was loaded aboard a helicopter stolen from Heli Voyageur, a company based in nearby Amos, Que.

Bellanger said the incident was the first of its kind at the mill and that all the stolen ore was insured.

Police refused to release further details of the case.

Few Memorial Day motorists run out of gas

SEATTLE (AP) — Many Washington state motorists may have awakened from Memorial Day with a craving for gasoline, but at least most of them made it home, officials said.

Ron MacDonald, State Patrol information officer, said in Seattle that the number of motorists who ran out of gas Monday and required help from troopers was about normal.

"Gas was tight though in some areas, particulary the Olympic Peninsula, Clark County and Grays Harbor and Pacific County," he added.

The Princess Marguerite cruise ship between Seattle and Victoria had to transport extra customers by bus to Canada on Saturday, but other weekend trips weren't so full, said spokesman Jack McDonald.

"I took my car to Victoria on one trip to get a tank of gas," he said.

In Nevada, a $10-million fuel-buying plan was approved Monday by the state legislature to try to guarantee at least one sure bet for visiting gamblers — that they won't run out of gasoline.

The action is believed the first of its kind by a U.S. state. The bill allows Nevada to purchase up to $10 million in fuel for resale to state distributors.

Elsewhere in the U.S., Memorial Day motorists kept a close watch on their gas gauges, apparently keeping their trips close to home. Traffic was light in many areas and there were few reports of drivers stranded without gas.

But there were reports of long lines at some of the few open service stations around the country and some gas prices were more than $1 a gallon.

There was also a truckers' protest against the rising price of diesel fuel.

Convoys of trucks traveling at an average speed of 35 mph criss-crossed the Texas Panhandle, New Mexico and Oklahoma, slowing traffic to a crawl.

The trucks, emergency lights flashing, began Sunday creeping along sections of Interstate 40. Drivers conversing on CB radios complained about paying up to $1.19 per gallon for diesel fuel.

In New York, where 90 percent of the metropolitan area stations were closed Sunday, one station was selling premium fuel for $1.30 a gallon. But that did not prevent a long line of drivers from lining up.

A dismal overcast contributed to light beach traffic, but camping, fishing and water sports areas were crowded. Fuel was available for up to $1 a gallon at Colorado River locations in California, Nevada and Arizona.

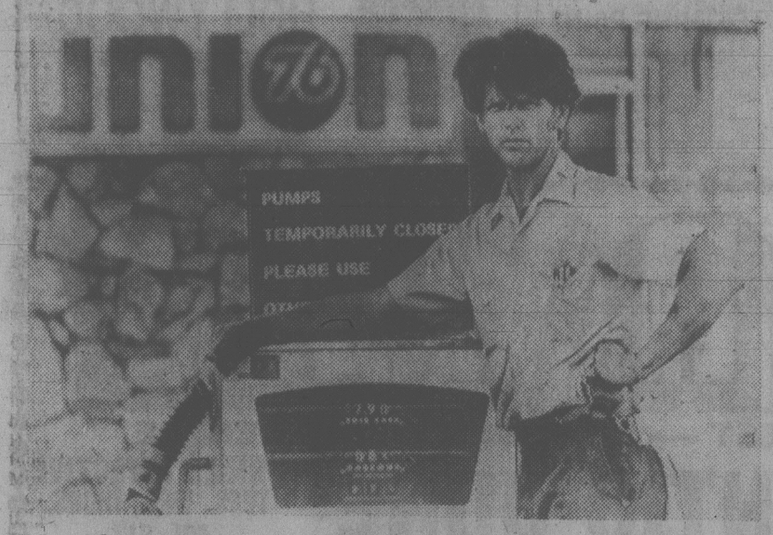

Utah officials estimated that at least 61 percent of the stations were open two of the three days during the weekend, with as many as 82 percent open in outlying areas Monday.

Free-Hess 'werewolf' squad?

BUECKEBURG, West Germany (Reuter) — A group of neo-Nazis were accused Monday of forming a "Werewolf" squad to try to free Hitler's deputy Rudolf Hess from West Berlin's Spandau prison.

The group also planned to capture Soviet military personnel from East Germany, the public prosecutor told a trial here.

Former West German army Lieut. Michael Kuehnen, 23; another soldier, Lothar-Harold Schulte, and shop assistant Lutz Wegener were charged with founding the underground organization on the lines of the Nazi Werewolves, a fanatical group formed to carry on the fight after Hitler's Germany was crushed in 1945.

Sidebotham . . . pistol-packing gasoline jockey

Times News Services

California service station owner Wes Sidebotham says he has been scheduled for talk show appearances and interviewed by foreign reporters since a photograph of him at a gas pump with a pistol was widely circulated.

Sidebotham, a 35-year-old father of two children, says he wasn't armed with the pistol because of unruly motorists in long lines, however, as the picture suggests. He says he began wearing a pistol and holster two months before the gasoline shortage because of a fear of robbers.

"When they ran that photo across the country, I thought to myself, 'Oh, God, people will think I'm a real hard-nose!' I would never use that gun on line-jumpers," Sidebotham said Monday.

Sidebotham owns a service station in Founatin Valley, Calif. A photograph taken by the Los Angeles Times and then picked up by The Associated Press showed Sidebotham, pistol tucked in his belt, resolutely standing at one of his gas pumps. The picture also was featured in a national magazine about the fuel shortage.

But Sidebotham said the Second World War, nine-millimeter German pistol he wore in the photograph had little to do with the fuel shortage or unruly motorists. He said motorists lining up at his station were, in fact, generally well-mannered.

The main purpose of the gun, Sidebotham said, "was to stop robberies."

"I started wearing it after a trio of guys went right down this street, holding up one station after another," he said. "I think they hit something like seven stations.

"I was lucky, because we closed about 10 minutes before they came around.

"I decided I was going to do something. I remembered what happened a while back in Los Angeles. A little old lady got out of a bus and a gang of kids beat her to death and took her purse. A whole busload of people just watched."

He said the only connection between the gun and the gasoline shortage was that, as the lines grew longer, he became even more afraid of robberies because of the increased cash on hand.

MD was drunk, mortician tells inquest at Alert Bay

ALERT BAY — Testimony about a doctor's behavior was heard Monday by a coroner's jury inquiring into the death of an 11-year-old girl in hospital Jan. 22.

Undertaker Leo O'Connell, of Campbell River, said the attending physician, Dr. Jack Pickup, failed to sign the death certificate and was inebriated when he spoke to him about the case at the hospital three days later.

Pickup, the only doctor among 1,800 residents on Cormorant Island, was quoted as saying he did not sign the death certificate because he did not know what he was going put as the cause of death.

Renee Smith, an Indian girl, died of gangrenous appendicitis and general peritonitis from a ruptured appendix. Nursing supervisor Shirley Lansdowne said she did not recall being given a diagnosis of the girl's condition and nurse Elizabeth Abamonge said the girl was the first patient she had known who was treated without a diagnosis.

There are 32 witnesses to be heard in the inquest, which is expected to continue into next week before Vancouver coroner Glen McDonald.

The funeral director said he stopped embalming the child's body because he suspected she had been victim of a sexual assault, although this was not proven.

He said Pickup opposed an autopsy because the girl's family did not want one, but O'Connell said he did not care and that he would tell the police of his concern.

Pickup agreed with O'Connell's assessment, the undertaker said, but the doctor refused to back him up.

The inquest also was told the results of medical tests taken when the girl was admitted did not come back from the hospital laboratory until the day she died, and Lansdowne said a delay of four days was not unusual.

Night in snow for climbers

GOVERNMENT CAMP, Ore. (AP) — After spending Sunday night in a stone shelter, three ill-equipped and inexperienced climbers who had gone missing on Mount Hood after a snowstorm found their way to safety Monday.

Clackamas County sheriff's deputies said the climbers were cold and hungry but otherwise in good condition after arriving at a hiking lodge.

The three were part of a group of 16 novice climbers and a group leader from Lewis and Clark College in Portland, who climbed from Cooper Spur to the summit of Mount Hood Sunday.

The group was trying to descend Illumination Saddle to Timberline Lodge when they were hit by a "whiteout" and became separated from the main party, deputies said. A whiteout occurs when heavy snowfall and high winds combine to reduce visibility to zero.

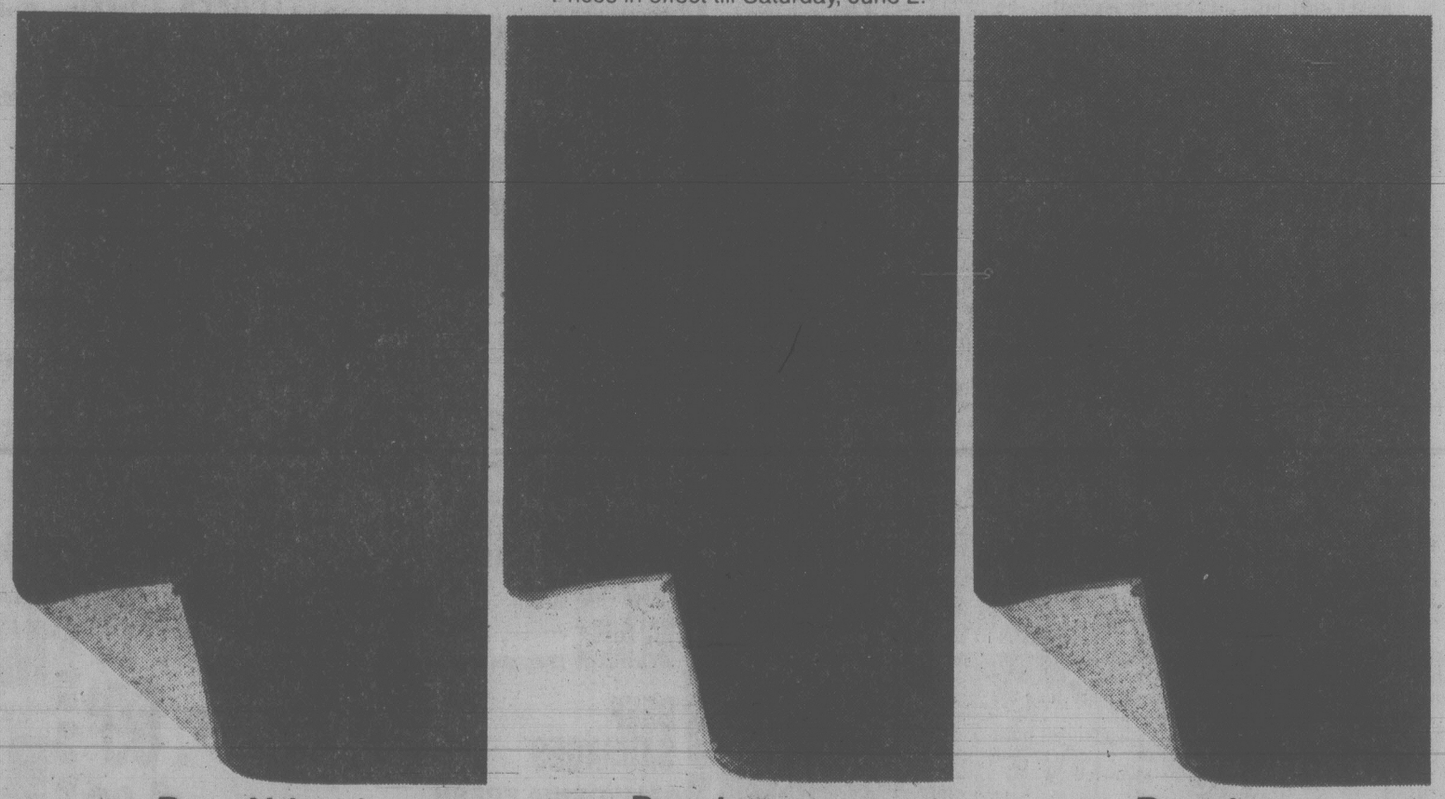

A sheriff's spokesman said the three did not carry any overnight camping equipment and wore clothing that wasn't suitable for the extremely cold weather that hit the mountain.

Chuck Adams of the Mountain Rescue and Safety Council of Oregon said the trio spent the night in a shelter.

They were identified as Steven R. Berg III, 22, a 1978 Lewis and Clark graduate from Portland; Robert M. Mulrow, 20, of Perrysburg, Ohio, and Katherine A. Simpson, 19, of Newport Beach, Calif.

Where have all the flowers gone at funerals?

Florists wilt as mourners give to foundations

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Some of the bloom has gone off their business and florists fear people are forgetting how to say it with flowers.

Floral tributes and memorial wreaths have declined in the past 15 years to the point where the industry estimates it is losing $30 million in sales a year.

The reason is that friends of the deceased are urged more and more to donate money to charitable foundations like the Heart Fund and Cancer Society.

Obituary columns in newspapers say "flowers gratefully declined," "please omit flowers," and "no flowers by request." Some suggest donations to a foundation, but few leave it to personal choice.

"It prevents someone who wants to remember with flowers from doing so," said Chris Dysart, head of a committee of Victoria florists concerned about the situation.

"Also, there may be people who want to do both" who are discouraged by the obituary notice.

She said the potential of flowers at a funeral is sometimes not appreciated.

"They can have a softening effect on the service."

But florists are not ignoring the fact that customs change, even though some flower businesses have been especially hard hit.

The pendulum swings, Dysart said, and it may be starting to swing back.

To help it happen they are considering increased advertising, including discreet messages adjoining the obituaries.

They also are looking at developing other opportunities, like the cash-and-carry trade for cut flowers, offering Friday flower specials for brightening livingrooms and apartments over a weekend.

Flowers Canada, the florists' professional organization, estimates the industry is worth $500 million.

But charities and medical research do not get the whole benefit of any loss of funeral flower business.

The Ontario Heart Foundation, for example, reckons it picked up $300,000 extra in 1977-78 because of the "no-flowers" trend.

Last year the Ontario division of the Cancer Society made nearly $1 million more in memorial donations than in 1977.

"The amazing thing is that it's almost completely unsolicited by the society," said executive director Alan Martin.

Betty Carter, former Flowers Canada Vancouver Island representative, said the heart fund has not reaped the full benefit, that extra donations are considerably smaller than what people would have spent to send flowers.

In addition, she said, there is the cost of accounting, of sending acknowledgements to survivors and receipts to the donors.

Graham McCall, of McCall Bros. funeral directors, doubted the charities made up the full value of business lost to florists.

"It is wonderful if people do send a donation to the heart fund. But then they don't do it. We all procrastinate."

He observed that many people hold the opinion that flowers are for the living, but there are also many — especially close members of a family — who feel flowers are most appropriate at a funeral service.

"It's a very personal thing. No funeral home that I know of influences thinking," he said.

Some undertakers say most people have made up their minds they don't want flowers before coming in to make funeral arrangements.

TOWN TALK

A number of stores in Greater Victoria — particularly small outlets near schools — have posted signs banning students over the lunch period.

Ostensibly the move is to cut down on shoplifting but Saanich resident Ruby Belknap feels it's grossly unfair to tar all the kids with the same brush.

Mrs. Belknap, whose husband Vic, former superintendent of child welfare in B.C., has been championing kids' causes for more than a quarter century, got mad when she spotted a sign banning kids from the Economart Food store in Royal Oak shopping centre.

She says she tried to get the manager to remove the sign but he refused and when she went to the Human Rights branch, was told nothing could be done.

HALEY
. . . unscheduled sidetrip

Best-seller author Alex Haley of Roots fame made many sidetrips during research for his acclaimed novel but probably not one as unscheduled as the sudden ferry ride he took on Monday.

Haley and a companion took their rented motorhome to Horseshoe Bay in West Vancouver but got into the wrong traffic lane and ended up jammed bumper-to-bumper with a couple of hundred other vehicles heading to Vancouver Island.

Rather than complicate the matter further, Haley elected to take the ferry ride to Nanaimo, saying later he liked the city so much that he was going to stay a day or two.

The freak fire-of-the-month award should go to Oak Bay.

The fire department, in a report to council Monday night covering April, said a a plastic plant pot suspended in a macrame holder in an Estevan Avenue house dropped to the dining room floor burning a small portion of shag carpet and scorching the base of a nearby buffet.

It is possible, said the department, that the rays of the early morning sun, reflected from a mirror on to the plastic pot, caused it to melt and burn the macrame. Damage: $235.

All you Scotch drinkers, take heart. If you think the price of a bottle is unbearably high here, consider the plight of those in the land where it's produced.

City police Insp. Scotty Grant, who recently visited his homeland, says a bottle of the ordinary, nothing special stuff costs about $10.60, more than 20 per cent more than the price here. Malt whisky is even dearer. About $16 is average.

Ask Esquimalt police Sgt. Jack Wright what he got for his birthday last week and he'll tell you with a wide grin — $100,000.

He says he's been buying books of tickets almost since the lottery's inception from his father John Wright, a retired carpenter.

Six months ago when he won three $25 prizes in a row, he turned to his wife Carmen and said: "It looks like the big one is coming up."

It did. On May 16. His 48th birthday.

Don't ask him, however, what he's going to do with the money. He has no mortgage on his house. He owns a boat which he seldom uses. He and his wife did a fair bit of travelling last year and found tourism wasn't quite their bag.

"We've got no plans," he says. "I suppose we'll look around for investment, but I just don't know."

Can Dash 7 draw noise test zero?

Victorians will get a chance to complain about a new noise Wednesday afternoon when a De Havilland Dash 7 circles the city to see if anyone notices.

The short takeoff and landing aircraft will land at Work Point at 2 p.m. and conduct flight tests for about one hour.

Transport Canada officials will be on hand to check decibel levels but the main interest will be in citizen response.

"It will be significant if no one complains," Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Mel Cooper said.

The test is part of a transportation day program being sponsored by the chamber.

Cooper said the chamber is withholding judgment on the feasibility of STOL craft until the results of the tests are known and are incorporated in a report due at the end of June.

But De Havilland officials say they are already certain of the results.

"The Dash 7 is so quiet no one will know it is there," Western Canada sales manager Michael Warwicke said.

"That's the problem with the Dash 7. It is just too quiet. People are not aware of it."

If feasible, the STOL service would operate from Work Point to a site near downtown Vancouver. Locating a site on the Vancouver side has been a major obstacle to the proposal.

The Dash 7 arrives at Victoria International Airport tonight and tests will start following a luncheon speech by De Havilland president John Sandford at The Empress.

The day's events will begin with a transportation seminar at the Princess Mary restaurant from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. Wednesday.

Little hope held for fugitives but hunt poised

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

RCMP are preparing a major search for two men believed to have fled into dense bush north of Tofino following last Tuesday's 35-ton marijuana bust at Sydney Inlet, although officers hold little hope of finding either alive.

Superintendent Bill Sherman of RCMP divisional headquarters in Courtenay said today logistics for the search are being worked out and should be completed by the end of the week.

He said the search will involve helicopters, dog-teams and scores of personnel in one "last-ditch" effort to try to locate two American men, the only members of an alleged marijuana smuggling group still unaccounted for.

Names of the pair have not been released. Both are white, aged 27 and 34. One is believed to have arrived in the inlet aboard the pleasure boat Whitecap, the other aboard the light freighter Samarkanda. The vessels were seized by police in the drug raid which resulted in the arrest of 21.

Sherman said only two officers aboard the RCMP patrol boat Duncan out of Tahsis are left of a search party that spent six days combing the rugged countryside for other suspects.

Sherman said the officers are carrying out a shoreline patrol using loud hailers and sirens.

He said searchers, including tracking dogs teams and officers in helicopters with special heat-sensing devices, have failed to pick up any sign of the men.

Although there is little hope either will be found alive, Sherman said one final search will be made, larger than any before.

Meanwhile, about 30 RCMP officers began the task this morning of destroying the 35-tons of marijuana in the municipal incinerator at North Cowichan.

The drug was unloaded from the Samarkanda at the Armed Forces dock in Esquimalt Monday and taken this morning to the North Cowichan site in two tractor-trailers and a smaller truck rented from Johnson Terminals.

The 21 suspects in custody appeared in Victoria provincial court Monday and were remanded to Friday for possible bail hearings.

All have been charged with importing marijuana, possession of marijuana for the purposes of trafficking and conspiring to import the drug between April 1 and May 23.

Roger Hanson, a lawyer from Santa Ana, Calif., attempted to represent the accused but was deemed ineligible because he does not hold a membership in the provincial bar association.

Crown counsel Gordon Macdonald advised Judge William Ostler that Hanson intended to confer with Victoria lawyer Patrick Sweeney, who was in Vancouver on Monday, in connection with the case and requested a remand until Friday.

$1 offer for old wharf

North Saanich council Monday night authorized Mayor George Westwood and municipal clerk Edward Fairs to negotiate purchase of the Deep Cove government wharf from the federal government.

The municipality is hoping to buy the six-foot wide, 287-foot long structure for $1 and renovate it for use as a public dock.

Fairs said today talks with Transport Canada officials will begin later this week.

The municipality has already commissioned Graham & Murray engineering firm to survey the wharf and come up with recommendations.

Okay given Jubilee plan

Royal Jubilee Hospital has been given full support by Health Minister Bob McClelland for its plan to reorganize its administration and financial management.

Hospital board chairman Terry Prentice said today the board's executive committee met the minister Monday to discuss recommendations made by a seven-member survey team.

The recommendations outline needed revisions of the hospital's administrative structure and urge the complete overhaul of the hospital's computerized management information system.

Prentice said the hospital will begin implementing immediately any changes that can be made without spending extra money.

He said McClelland supported the hiring of a project director, whose duties will be to carry out most of the report's 68 recommendations.

After the director has been hired, a budget to cover the cost of implementing the recommendations will be drawn up and discussed with the minister, Prentice said.

IWA joins fight against oil tank switch

The International Woodworkers of America will join View Royal residents in their fight against the proposed transfer of Inner Harbor oil tanks to Plumper Bay in Esquimalt Harbor.

IWA spokesmen were among 120 persons who crowded into the small community hall Monday night at a meeting arranged by the View Royal Ratepayers and Community Association.

The IWA is concerned about accidents that could result in the loss of lives and jobs of some 350 people who work at Victoria Plywood Ltd., adjacent to the proposed tank farm site.

Jack Groves, first vice-president of the Victoria Labor Council, said Esquimalt harbor is already loaded with logging industry traffic and oil traffic running north and south would conflict with the east-west lumber traffic. Navy traffic, he said, would aggravate the problem.

IWA business agent Al Carle said View Royal is becoming "the compost box of southern Vancouver Island because that is the kind of industry moving in, the kind unwanted elsewhere."

A tank farm in Plumper Bay, he said, would place oil barges in the middle of a busy booming ground. Unloading facilities, he added, could be located next to the mill's power house, threatening industrial accidents.

Capt. Rodney Trail, who said he has served as master aboard tankers, warned that tankers empty at a massive rate, causing a lot of fumes.

"You are going to have those fumes going right into the new housing development or into the trailer park on the Indian land which is heated by propane, a very vulnerable gas," he said.

He said the winter winds would drive the fumes down on the sawmill "which would just go up in one big bang."

Dr. R.A. Watson said View Royal would be wiped out by an explosion on the tank farm.

Victoria Plywood manager Newton Cameron said he has been assured the tanks would be put underground in rock. The feeder lines from oil barges would either be underground or under water.

He said an oil tank farm is built underground in the middle of Paris.

But former Saanich fire chief Joe Sutherland said going underground meant only that people would not see the tanks but it would not stop explosions.

Cameron conceded the mill has five or six dryer fires a year "but we have a fairly high roof and we have been able to contain the fires."

IWA first vice-president Murray Drew said a few thousand gallons of fuel in a storage tank caught fire a few years ago and the mill was saved only by woodworkers who turned out to fight the fire.

Regional director Al Beasley said one of the reasons Victoria wants the oil tanks moved from the Inner Harbor is that the land is now worth $17 a square foot.

Robin Spear said Oak Bay's regional director Shirley Dowell, who heads the oil tank relocation committee, had deliberately misled or been ignorant of the facts when she said an oil tank farm in View Royal would lower taxes.

"There'll be no bonanza in tax reductions," he said.

While most attending the meeting were opposed to oil tanks in View Royal, one resident was not convinced it was a bad idea.

Mrs. Frances Cammiade, 119 Helmcken, told reporters she had lived in View Royal for 19 years and was not convinced a tank farm could pose threats if all the necessary precautions were taken.

She said the ratepayers' association did not speak for all View Royal residents.

"They have a negative view and fight everything proposed for View Royal," she added.

I'm just back from a holiday during which I attended the annual provincial conference of business and professional women's clubs of British Columbia and the Yukon, then went on for a short visit with friends in the south Okanagan.

The conference was hosted this year by the Surrey Club. Provincial president Gertrude Demecha of Kamloops chaired all business sessions. Delegates and observers attended from 20 clubs throughout the province and from Whitehorse, Y.T.

Theme of the conference was Sharing the Action Today.

High on the agenda was an emergency resolution, presented by the Victoria Club, regarding the B.C. Human Rights Commission.

It urged the B.C. government to dissolve the present commission and appoint forthwith one that is better able to consider cases of discrimination and that represents equality of the sexes.

The reasons given included the fact that "some members of the present commission, during a sitting to consider discrimination against a woman, made disgusting and discriminating remarks regarding women."

Also, several members of the Commission have admitted "they had never read the United Nations Human Rights declaration nor the B.C. Human Rights Code."

Also, that members of such a commission "should have wide appreciation of human rights and open minds regarding either sex" which it is obvious some do not have.

The present commission is made up of 10 men and only two women, an imbalance that led to the resolution's request for equal representation of the sexes in any reconstructed set-up.

Other resolutions passed at the conference will be sent to the provincial government in a brief, within the next few weeks.

Four other resolutions to be forwarded deal with municipal qualifications for office, training of speech pathologists, changes in home economics programs and civil legal aid for women.

There is also one pointing out the need for some form of national maintenance enforcement, backed by the provinces, so that spouses entitled to maintenance be freed from the time, energy and cost of initiating court enforcement proceedings.

Victoria Club president Joan Currie, who is the provincial resolutions, by-laws and regulations chairman, conducted the resolutions session.

A workshop on political awareness was chaired by provincial first vice-president Beverley Hoy of the Vancouver Club and a workshop on programs was headed by the second vice-president Shirley White, member of the Cranbrook Club.

Dorie Hanson represented the Victoria Club on a special program planned to honor young women who are new members in BPW Clubs throughout the province.

Guest speaker at the final banquet was Dr. Linda Erickson, assistant director of women's studies at University of British Columbia.

The next provincial conference will be held in Kelowna in May, 1980.

Gertrude Demecha and her board members, elected for a two-year term, will remain in office until the 1980 conference.

Check roof after storm

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — A local shingle manufacturer advises homeowners to inspect roofs after a storm. Owens-Corning Fibreglass Corp. says wind and rain can dislodge shingles, allowing water to seep under the roof. If the damage is caught in time, often only one shingle need be replaced; if not, the wood deck under the shingles may rot, causing damage to the roof.

Cookies a learning tool?

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If reading a book could be as much fun as eating a chocolate chip cookie, wouldn't kids rush to get their hands in the bookshelves?

Yes, says Dennis Martin, a librarian who feels he has proven the point.

Martin is convinced that the success of his Super Reader program, in which kids were awarded sweet treats for reading library books, showed that a reading "crisis" can be resolved if the right technique is used — bribery.

"I think children should be paid for learning how to read," Martin says. "My message is that if you set up a learning environment that is appealing to the children . . . you're going to get them to perform."

In Martin's case, the tools of bribery were half-pound bags of chocolate chip cookies, payment for the reading of four library books and the submitting of questionnaires about them.

It sounds simple. But that philosophy of offering youngsters outside rewards to do things they are supposed to want to do for the joy of learning is among the most controversial issues in education today.

"It's a lively topic," says Dr. John McNeil, head of reading specialists in the UCLA school of education.

"Generally, extrinsic rewards are not regarded very positively as compared with building reading programs where kids read for their own benefit. In the long run, I suspect you won't be creating committed readers."

But Delwyn Schubert, reading clinic director at California State University, Los Angeles, and author of Improving the Reading Program, is much less critical.

"I do feel extrinsic rewards have their place," he says. "You can liken many youngsters who are poor readers to old pumps. They have to be primed a bit.

"In Mr. Martin's case, the cookie is like the primer. Then once the youngster gets reading, maybe he will read for his own sake and the reward will be intrinsic."

For the three months that the program was in operation, circulation of children's books at the Holly Park library in suburban Hawthorne increased nearly 86 per cent. More than 500 children earned bags of cookies.

Martin admits that he doesn't know if the level of reading continued after the program was ended late last summer, but says that is a study he would welcome.

"The (reading) problem is so bad that a great majority of children from schools in our service area are not capable of reading at their grade level," says Martin. "We wanted to see if we could change the trend."

The numbers, he says, are evidence that the program did succeed.

"We had the complete support of the local public schools teachers and parents. They knew how disturbing the problem was that so many of these children are getting into the upper grades without being competent independent readers."

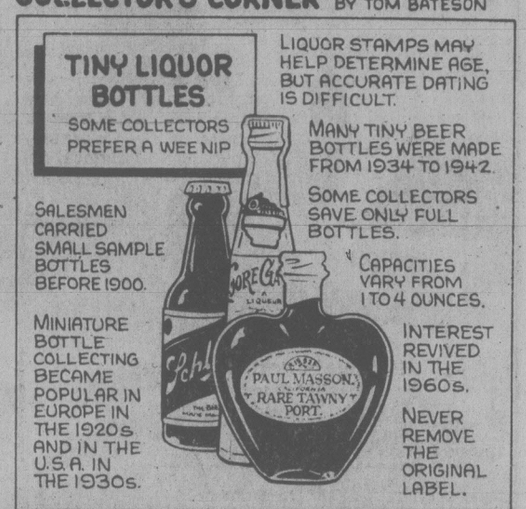

UCLA's McNeil says the quick, and possibly temporary, successes of punishment and reward programs distract educators from the central problem: How do you make reading enjoyable for children so they will want to do it?

"So much of the schools' present program is just a series of tasks kids are asked to do," he says. "They are isolated skills, such as recognizing consonents or long or short vowels. These tasks are not seen by the child as useful for their own purposes. Therefore, motivation becomes a problem.

"I'm not saying there may not be some children that the extrinsic reward problem program may work with," he adds.

"But in general, I don't think the results are good. It's a simple, easy way out just to bribe somebody. It'll never be an answer to our reading problem."

Youth Clinic

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel of experts: Saul Levine, psychiatrist; Marion Powell, medical doctor; Graham Cotter, clergyman; and Bruce Vichert, social worker. Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, B.C., V8W 2N4.

DEAR DR. VICHERT: I am a 19-year-old female first-year university student who is in love with a guy 2½ years younger. We have been going together 1½ years and intend to be together for a long time. We are happy together and never think about the age difference when we're together. All my friends say that it is wrong to go with a guy that much younger, especially at our stages of life. In fact, that seems to be the general opinion of society. It bothers me at times knowing that all these people feel this way. I'm not asking you whether I should leave him. I just want your opinion on such a relationship.

ANSWER: It is true that in our culture people would think it unusual for a 19-year-old female to be going steady with a 16½-year-old young man. It is expected that in a relationship the man will be older than the women. I imagine people's first instinct would be to say something negative about your relationship.

Whether or not you want to end your relationship on the basis of what other people think will have to be your decision based on the quality of feeling between the two of you.

Whether your relationship works and is right for the two of you is obviously for the two of you to decide. This would require both of you talking about it, and you should talk about it honestly because it does produce a pressure that could influence how you feel about each other.

A two-year difference in age is more conspicuous at your present age than it will be 10 years from now.

There are problems in any relationship, and sometimes the problems aren't as important as how the two people deal with the problem.

DEAR DR. COTTER: I am 15, in my second year of high school and very interested in a girl in first-year high school. I have not spoken to her for a few weeks and I am wondering if she even remembers me.

As she is a very attractive girl I am afraid of even talking to her for fear of rejection. What would be my best method of getting to know her, and having her notice me?

ANSWER: The chances are the girl remembers you but is equally shy. You will never know unless you speak to her. If her response is positive then you become friends. If negative then you'll have to learn to live with the rejection.

Dear Dr. Cotter: I am 13 years old. That is 13 years without love or affection. My mother is a drug addict. While other girls come home with their friends to a mother who says, "Hi, how was your day?" I come home to a mother who is (a) bombed on the bed, (b) crying in the kitchen, or (c) screaming at me for some idiotic reason.

Aside from that I am quite unpopular. I need someone to talk to before I have a nervous breakdown.

ANSWER: You write a good, calm letter for someone who is under your pressure and that will be a help to you. But you do need someone to talk to: a school counsellor, minister, or doctor, wherever you live.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: I just heard that a scientist in Budapest, Hungary, recently came up with a formula that will actually grow hair on bald heads! They claim that this miracle lotion, which is a combination of herbs and chemicals, not only restores hair on bald heads, it also prevents people who have hair from losing it! This sounds too good to be true.

I'm told that the Budapest shopkeepers sold out their first shipment to some very cynical customers; when, a week later, the stuff started to show results, word got around and the shopkeepers had to call the police to keep the rioting customers from breaking down the doors.

Have you heard anything about this product?

INTERESTED

DEAR INTERESTED: Yes, I've heard those hair-raising reports, but I'm skeptical.

If this product from Hungary is not also from hunger, it will be marketed all over the world.

DEAR ABBY: PUZZLED wrote: "I'm sure you've heard of Peeping Toms, but I'll bet you've never heard of a Peeping Tina. Tina is my wife. We have a view of a large apartment house from our bedroom window, and Tina loves to stand in the dark and watch men undress. Is something wrong with her?"

You replied, "Such curiosity is considered normal in adolescents, but your wife should have outgrown it by now."

Abby, I've lived in high-rise apartments for years, as do many of my friends, and we all enjoy the game of "neighbor-watching." As a matter of fact, a pair of binoculars by the window is standard equipment for every apartment.

I am in my 30s and my friends are in the 50s and we aren't considered adolescents.

LOVES TO LOOK

DEAR LOVES: Whatever happened to the right to privacy? Or do you go with the theory that people who undress with the shades up are closet exhibitionists? Granted there is a touch of the voyeur in all of us — but binoculars by the window? Aw, c'mon!

DEAR ABBY: Why do fellows say, "I'll call you," and then you never hear from them again?

This has happened to me and a lot of my girlfriends so often it's not evey funny.

HURT

DEAR HURT: Some fellows say, "I'll call you," because they think that's what most girls want to hear. And they're right. But it has about as much meaning as, "See you around," or, "Let's get together sometime."

The next time a fellow says, "I'll call you," if you want to shake him up, say, "Terrific. When?"

DEAR ABBY: Please settle an argument between my husband and me. He says that my sister's husband is HIS brother-in-law. I say that my sister's husband is MY brother-in-law, but he isn't my husband's brother-in-law. He is my husband's sister-in-law's husband. Who's right?

SAN CLEMENTE

DEAR SAN: Webster defines "brother-in-law" as follows: 1) the brother of one's husband or wife; 2) the husband of one's sister; 3) the husband of the sister of one's wife or husband. So your husband is right.

Appendicitis often elusive

By L. L. Coleman, MD

We had a strange and distressing experience which I would like to relate to you. Our 10-year-old daughter complained of severe bellyache. The doctor thought she might have appendicitis and that an operation might be necessary. We took her to the hospital and, after a highly emotional outburst on the part of my daughter (and us, too!), she was sent home without surgery. We were told that all she had was tonsillitis. We can hardly believe this was true. — Mr. and Mrs. K.B.

DEAR MR. AND MRS. B.:

Your daughter (and you, too) are the beneficiaries of the excellent judgment of your doctor and surgeon. There are few more difficult diagnoses to make than that of an acute appendicitis, in people of all ages. In children, it is even more difficult.

Many children who have sore throats, tonsillitis, ear infections, or swollen glands in the neck may complain of severe abdominal pain. The explanation is that the infection in the throat may be responsible for enlargement of tiny glands around the intestines. This is known as "mesenteric adenitis," which mimics all the signs and symptoms of appendicitis.

Indeed, you were fortunate that your doctors recognized the problem and spared your child an operation.

The very reverse is true, too. Sometimes, children with minimal evidence of abdominal pain may, at surgery, be found to have a "red hot" appendix bordering on abscess formation and peritonitis. I have enormous admiration for the family physician who is the first line of defence in such delicate medical problems.

I want to introduce an additional thought. Sometimes, when there is great confusion in the difficult diagnosis of appendicitis in children, exploratory surgery can often be the safest, the wisest and, yes, most conservative, approach to a life-threatening situation.

★ ★ ★

I have the most intolerable itching in the ears. You name it and I've tried it. Pencils, paper clips are only a part of my "surgical approach." Any suggestions? — Mr. J.V.

DEAR MR. V.:

My first suggestion is to get rid of your "surgical" instruments and sensibly take care of your problem. There is only one way of treating this annoying condition and that is to first find out the cause. Let me name a few possibilities. Fungus infection of the ear canal, eczema of the ear canal, middle ear discharge, allergy, hair spray, dirt, hair dyes, nail polish, cosmetics, aftershave lotions and soaps. These can cause itching in both men and women.

Once the cause is found it can be actively treated. Antifungal medication, antibiotics, cortisone ointments and irrigations are effective. First, find out the cause.

Canada's first railway began operating in 1836. It ran from the town of St. Jean, Quebec, north to Laprairie on the St. Lawrence River — a distance of just 15 miles.

The first locomotive on this line burned wood for fuel and was only 13½ feet long. On one of its trial runs, the locomotive failed to pull four of the train's six passenger coaches, and horses had to be pressed into service.

It was a modest beginning, but the railway industry was destined to play a major role in establishing Canadian growth patterns. British Columbia joined Confederation in 1871, on the promise that a railway linking them with the rest of Canada would be completed within ten years.

THE RACE FOR SPACE

Downtown retail space is very hard to find — even worse, it's also very expensive. So why has nobody snapped up our space just off Douglas on Johnson. Reasonable rates, loads of space (2700-5400 sq. ft.) and excellent lease terms. With heavy one way traffic your advertising is almost built in and theres a parkade a stone's throw away. Take as is or we will alter for you. This may be your space.

Heavy barrage empties Tyre

Times News Services

BEIRUT — Israeli gunboats and long range artillery today pounded the southern coastal port of Tyre and several frontier towns and villages, the state-owned Beirut radio said.

Most of Tyre's remaining residents were driven out as the fourth day of shelling intensified a massive exodus from the coastal town of Tyre and its surrounding villages, witnesses said.

Beirut radio said casualty reports were not immediately available but that damage to Tyre and surrounding areas was extensive.

In Tel Aviv, however, the Israeli military command denied its forces were involved.

Several Israeli naval vessels and gunboats started shelling the port of Tyre and especially the town's Al Raml and other residential area shortly after midnight," the Lebanese broadcast said.

The Palestine News Agency WAFA said the Israeli-backed Lebanese Christian militia forces were also involved in the heavy shelling of the region.

Beirut radio, commenting on the repeated attacks, said one of Israel's objectives was to "hamper the Lebanese peace process at a time when President Elias Sarkis is trying to set up a government of national unity."

Beirut radio said an Israeli destroyer escorted by missile boats opened fire on Palestinian-controlled Tyre and also hit Ras el Ein and Bayyada, two guerrilla-held coastal villages about five kilometres south.

In addition, it was claimed Israeli gunners had fired on a string of 12 villages along a 24-kilometre front on the northern flank of the UN interim peacekeeping force in southern Lebanon.

Convoys of Lebanese and Palestinian refugees drove from Tyre 40 kilometres northward to the coastal town of Sidon, where a spokesman for the governor's office said no casualty estimate was available because ambulance drivers were unwilling to go south.

The independent Kuwait newspaper Al Qabas said Israel has demanded the immediate withdrawal of reported Syrian surface-to-air missiles from the Bekaa Valley area in eastern Lebanon.

"Otherwise Israel will order its air force to attack Syrian troop concentrations on Lebanese territory," the paper quoted unidentified diplomats in Washington as saying.

Meanwhile, Israel Monday released 16 Arab prisoners in a long-expected gesture of goodwill to Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

In Jerusalem, a bomb apparently planted by Palestinian guerrillas exploded today at a soldiers hitchhiking station near the West Bank settlements of Gush Etzion south of Jerusalem but caused no damage or injuries, a military spokeswoman said.

BOSTON (AP) — The parents of three-year-old leukemia victim Chad Green will bring him home within two weeks to receive chemotherapy treatment, their lawyer said today.

George Donovan said the Greens believe Chad has received all the help that can be offered by a Mexican laetrile clinic, where he has been treated since January.

Donovan said he will go to Judge Guy Volterra in Plymouth superior court "to try to clear the way for their return."

Last week, a spokesman for Massachusetts General Hospital, where Chad was once treated, said tests show that the boy may not have received chemotherapy at the laetrile clinic in Tijuana.

Chad's parents, Gerald and Diana Green, took the boy to Mexico last winter, disobeying a court order by Volterra that barred them from treating their son with laetrile.

"He will return within the next two weeks," Donovan said.

Last week, Donovan asked the state Supreme Court to overturn Volterra's prohibition on laetrile. The court did not immediately rule.

Volterra ordered the parents to cut off home treatments with laetrile, vitamins and enzymes. He said the child was being poisoned by cyanide, one ingredient of laetrile.

GARDENING
jack beastall

Home gardeners in areas recently serviced by sewers are noticing some problems with garden plants. This is becoming quite common as sewer systems are being extended and septic tanks eliminated.

Most of us were looking forward to the day when the final connections would be made and the old septic tank disconnected. No more cleaning out the tank; no more digging up the overflow tiles to find a blockage.

As most tanks had the septic field under the front lawn or the back garden, clearing obstructions from the tiles could be quite a disturbance to the plantings or lawn.

So we welcomed the increase in taxes and the connection fees with the belief that at least a few problems associated with suburban living would disappear.

Many of the older, established plants, such as native trees, lilacs, other large shrubs, and even weeping willows, began to show foliage troubles and some eventually died. Lawns that had always been green, turned yellow, and hedges also were affected.

It wasn't long before it became apparent that the areas most affected were those located over or near the old septic tank field. These areas had received plenty of water and food from the septic overflow, and we had never realized the boon a septic tank could be to a gardener.

The roots of these well established plants had gone deep into the subsoil for their nourishment, far deeper than the gardener could reach with normal surface watering.

The problems with lawns were a little more difficult to figure out since lawn grass is not deep rooting, but the fact that a regular feeding program soon returned them to normal was an indication they, too, were getting a good supply of food from the septic overflow.

Through the years, as sewer projects have replaced septic tanks in many of the built-up areas on southern Vancouver Island, home gardeners have run into similar problems and sought advice.

It is difficult to suggest any way of overcoming the loss of the septic fields, although it may be of some help to those in areas yet to be serviced if they have some idea of what may happen.

Heavy watering of those areas likely to have depended on moisture from the septic overflow may work for some. A lot will depend on the type of soil. In any case it should be started as soon as the septic tank is disconnected — not left, as we did, until the plants were indicating their needs.

There will be no trouble with replacement plants. These will adjust to the normal watering they receive and their roots will not go so deep into the subsoil.

It would be wise when making replacements to add some well-rotted manure, compost or mushroom compost to the soil to hold more water within the root area. It is doubtful if any compost was added while the septic tank supplied the food on a regular day-to-day basis.

Our gardens are doing well now. The problems ended as soon as we learned it was our job to supply the plants with food and water, something we neglected in the old septic tank days.

Before the judge

A 23-year-old man who pleaded guilty in provincial court Monday to possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking was sentenced to three months in jail.

Pierre Paul Perron, who was originally charged with possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking and trafficking in marijuana, re-elected trial by magistrate and pleaded guilty to the first charge.

Crown counsel Gordon Macdonald, who entered a stay of proceedings on the second charge, told Judge William Ostler police were in the washroom of the Bastion Inn beer parlor Jan. 12 when they overheard conversation between Perron and two others. Officers then checked Perron and found five quarter-ounce bags of marijuana.

Macdonald told the court Perron was convicted in September, 1976, of simple possession of marijuana in Moose Jaw and was fined $150.

Grant Hugh Borden, 1245 Pandora, pleaded guilty May 7.

Joseph Allan Benoit, 717 Pandora, was charged following a May 22 fire and had been in custody awaiting a psychiatric report.

The report was submitted to the court but Ostler deferred his decision after argument by Crown counsel Robert Mulligan and duty legal aid lawyer Vincent Giles, who elected trial by judge and jury on Benoit's behalf.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Margaret Wood, 63, of 531 West Bay Terrace, $500; and Wilfred Roger Lorteau, 38, of 2310 Quadra, $450.

The prosecution filed notices of appeal Monday against the sentences of three men convicted by a county court jury May 4 of drug offences after RCMP and armed forces seized 13½ tons of marijuana on Obstruction Island in Shelter Inlet northwest of Tofino last July.

William Harvey Shears, 31, also known as Ronald Cecil Spurrell, of Surrey, and Richard John Andrews, 25, also known as John Mobley Doss, of Dillon, Colo., formerly of St. John's, Nfld., were sentenced last Friday to nine years for conspiracy to import marijuana, nine years for importing marijuana and five years for possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking. All terms were made concurrent.

Both men were returned to St. John's earlier last week where they pleaded guilty to importing 4,200 pounds of marijuana found in a cave June 25, 1974, on the east shore of Newfoundland. They were sentenced to 10 years for that offence.

But because Judge Peter Millward, in dealing with the 1978 offences in B.C., did not rule his terms must be served consecutively to the Newfoundland offence, they will be served at the same time.

A third man, Garth Clarence Vincent Joseph Sexton, 28, of Vancouver, was sentenced by Millward last Friday to 10 years each for conspiracy to import marijuana and importing marijuana and five years for possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking arising from the same B.C. matter last July. Those terms also were made concurrent.

Sexton, it was disclosed when he was sentenced last Friday, had been sentenced to 10 years for the 1974 Newfoundland marijuana offence to which Andrews and Shears pleaded guilty early last week. He was at large at the time of the B.C. offence.

But his 10 years on the B.C. offences will also be served concurrently with the 10 years on the Newfoundland offence because Judge Millward did not rule the two matters must be served consecutively.

A fourth man, Frederick Charles Scott, 28, of Vancouver, was found guilty May 4 of possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking in the B.C. matter last July and was sentenced by Millward to four years.

Crown counsel Gordon Macdonald said in his notices filed Monday in the B.C. Court of Appeal that all the sentences were not commensurate with the gravity of the offence, were not sufficient to deter the convicts and others and were inadequate considering the backgrounds of the men.

Macdonald also appealed the jury's acquittal of Scott of charges of conspiracy to import marijuana and importing marijuana saying the verdicts were unreasonable and contrary to evidence and that Judge Millward was in error in not admitting into evidence all conversations.

A fifth man, Frank Piersanti, 34, of Chicago, whose real name is Steven Cavanaugh Manning, had his charges of importing and possession for the purpose of trafficking removed from the jury for technical reasons and the prosecution has laid new charges of conspiracy to traffic, importing and possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking.

His only charge to go before the jury was conspiracy to import marijuana and the jury acquitted him.

But in his notice of appeal, Macdonald said Judge Millward erred in not admitting all conversations and also erred in instructing the jury that in order to convict Piersanti-Manning, they had to be satisfied that he joined the conspiracy prior to his boarding the vessel Weath-erly, on which 11 men were arrested July 15 northwest of Tofino.

But Mr. Justice Lloyd McKenzie, in awarding Michael Slane Fleming that amount against Kenneth Harold Avery, ruled that Fleming was 25 per cent at fault for failure to proceed with caution at an intersection. That reduced reduce the award to about $45,000.

The car and the motorcycle were travelling in opposite directions at night on a straight road Nov. 24, 1977.

McKenzie, in a written judgment following a three-day trial in Victoria in April, said the car started a left turn and the motorcyclist turned right "trying to get around in front of him" and the front of the car struck the left side of the motorcycle.

Fleming, who used to work on a greenchain at a sawmill, suffered several comminuted fractures in the pelvic region and spent 48 days in hospital.

McKenzie said the evidence made it clear that Avery was cutting the corner and did not see the motorcycle until the collision.

"There is no question but that the defendant was negligent in failing to keep a proper lookout so as to observe the headlight of the approaching motorcycle and to yield to it the right-of-way," said McKenzie.

"I also find as a fact that the defendant failed to signal his intention to make a left turn and hold that he was negligent in this respect."

Ruling this week on venue switch

Mr. Justice Howard Callaghan of B.C. Supreme Court is expected to give his ruling sometime this week on a requested change of venue for the first degree murder trial of Tommy Ross Jr., 19, charged in the death May 15, 1978, of 28-year-old Janice Aili Forbes.

Earlier, it had been expected that the decision would be given Monday. Defence counsel Doug Christie applied for a new site for the trial and suggested Vancouver.

Callaghan put a no-publication ban on the hearing except for the fact that a change of venue was requested.

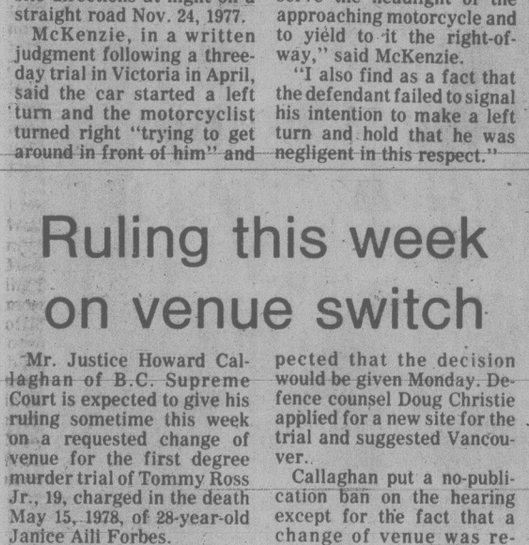

Collier here Thursday

The visit will be Collier's last official inspection of the Maritime Forces Pacific and Pacific region facilities. He retires this summer after 37 years of service.

His service included action aboard HMCS Cayuga during the Korean war, for which he was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross.

McCLELLAND

Oak Bay Manor has no legal right to evict 138 long-term care patients by Thursday, Health Minister Bob McClelland said today.

He also said the provincial government will not be blackmailed into allowing the privately-owned manor, which has had a large number of problems, to continue operating as a long-term care facility.

Under the Landlord and Tenant Act, a landlord must give 30-days eviction notice.

Last week, the government announced it was cancelling the interim long-term care licence for the manor, built in 1972 as a luxury retirement home between Cadboro Bay Road and Cranmore Street.

The licence expires Thursday.

Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith told council Monday night that the manor had given the 138 elderly long-term care patients until then to leave.

"I want to assure them that we will do everything we can to see that their lives aren't disrupted any further."

A meeting was arranged for today between health ministry officials and the manor's owner, Neil Cook of Vancouver, to clarify the situation.

Smith told council the manor shouldn't be able to give the patients five days notice and added he will press for provincial legislation to allow the minister of health to impose a trusteeship in such situations so there can be no sudden eviction of patients.

He said he asked the government to institute an inquiry into the manor following two deaths there and the result was that the licensing board had recommended that the interim licence not be renewed.

But, said Smith, in situations such as this patients are not suddenly evicted but the private owner and the government, which pays for the care of the patients, agree on a changeover period of time, either to upgrade facilities or to move patients out.

Saying that there has to be sensible relocation, Smith said he has received many phone calls from relatives of patients. "It's a very, very unhappy result," he said.

Smith said he hopes Cook will agree to a more reasonable time so patients can be relocated.

All DC-10s grounded for probe

Times News Services

The U.S. Federal Aviation Administration today grounded all 134 U.S.-registered DC-10 aircraft effective immediately because of "grave and potentially dangerous deficiencies" in the assembly that holds the plane's engine to the wing.

The action was taken as a result of the investigation into last Friday's crash of an American Airlines DC-10 in Chicago which claimed at least 273 lives in the worst air disaster in U.S. history.

The grounding order was extended also to U.S.-registered A300 Airbuses, a European-made twin-engined jet. The FAA said the engine mounting structure on that airplane is similar to that of a DC-10.

FAA Administrator Langhorne Bond said the order will remain in effect until all of the engine assemblies can be checked.

Bond told a news conference that he learned of the results of the visual inspections of the assemblies that hold the engines on the aircraft about two hours before ordering the DC-10s grounded.

"I have no choice but to ground all U.S. DC-10s immediately," he told reporters.

Bond indicated the trouble involves more than just the bolt that gave way on the American Airlines DC-10 that crashed in Chicago.

Sources said earlier that the planes will be grounded because of the discovery of metal fatigue.

He said the government is requiring an inspection of "the entire system that links DC-10 engines to the wings."

He gave no indication how long it will take to carry out the inspections.

Just before Bond made his announcement, McDonnell Douglas Corp., manufacturer of the DC-10, issued an "alert service bulletin" calling for immediate additional inspections of the engine pylons of all the planes before they are flown again.

The company said this was being done because of a crack discovered in a pylon on a DC-10 that was being inspected in Chicago.

"No DC-10 should fly until this inspection is made," McDonnell Douglas spokesman Ray Towne said in Long Beach, Calif.

Meanwhile, in Chicago, United Airlines said it is grounding all of its DC-10s immediately.

Metal fatigue implies a weakening of metal parts or structures because of extended use, vibration, other stress or faulty manufacture.

The investigation has already sparked disagreement between two U.S. government safety officials — one in Washington, the other at the crash scene in Chicago — disagree over whether American Airlines Flight 191 was doomed when an engine fell off.

One expert said it was impossible to control the aircraft once the engine separated, while another says loss of the engine alone would not have fatally crippled the DC-10.

But investigators in Chicago said Monday that flight data recorded on the jet shows the crew was trying to correct the problems before it crashed.

Gold tops old mark yet again

LONDON (AP) — Gold hit a record $277.625 an ounce in Zurich today as the U.S. dollar firmed in quiet trading on the world's money markets. The noon quote in Zurich was $1.75 above Monday's closing price of $275.875, the previous high.

London's five major bullion dealers fixed the price for the morning trading session at $276.10, a record for the London market. The gold and foreign currency markets were closed in London on Monday for the spring bank holiday. But gold had closed Friday at $270.25

The metal has risen almost $30 an ounce in the last month and more than $50 since the start of this year. Some dealers predict a price of about $300 by the end of 1979.

Bishop takes over

SALISBURY (AP) — Bishop Abel Muzorewa, Rhodesia's first black prime minister, was sworn into office today, ending 90 years of white-minority rule in the former British colony.

Muzorewa, a United Methodist bishop, took the oath of office shortly after being asked to form a government by Rhodesia's first black president, Joseph Gumede, also sworn in today.

Muzorewa was expected to name his 19-member cabinet Wednesday. His government will be installed Friday.

Rhodesia also faces continuation of the guerrilla war waged by exiled nationalist leaders Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, a boycott from the rest of black Africa and uncertain chances for recognition by the United States and Britain.

Gumede, a former schoolmaster and diplomat and descendant of a 19th-century Zulu warrior-chief, was elected to the ceremonial figurehead presidency Monday by the two houses of the new parliament elected last month. He is a member of the Ndebele tribe and is expected to act as a bridge between his people and Muzorewa's dominant Shona tribe.

Muzorewa, whose United African National Council won 51 of the 100 seats in the lower house, will name a cabinet of 19 members including five whites. But two of the three other black parties announced they would not accept the two cabinet seats allotted each of them by a proportional representation system in the constitution.

Bumping pays for family and makes a profit too

TORONTO (CP) — A vacationing Toronto family has been bumped from an overbooked airline flight for the second time in 10 days, but the family is happy and $1,300 richer.

Richard Gordon, his wife, Marlene, and their two children, Melanie, 9, and Tara, 6, volunteered to give up their seats on two overbooked American Airlines flights out of Toronto on May 18 as they started their Bermuda vacation.

To compensate them for the delays, American paid them $700 in U.S. funds or about $810 Canadian.

Heading back to Toronto during the weekend, the Gordons were on an overbooked flight from New York and once again offered to give up their seats.

This time, American paid them $150 U.S. each — a total of $600.

"The way I see it is that we had a marvellous holiday, and we made a profit of about $900 Canadian after our expenses were paid," said Gordon, 35, who was going to Bermuda for a convention but decided to turn the trip into a family vacation after a baby-sitter fell ill.

"We hadn't planned to take the children until the last minute and if it hadn't been for them we wouldn't have made so much money. The girls netted $700 (U.S.) between them."

Mrs. Gordon, 32, said: "It was just a big joke.

"We were in no hurry so we kept volunteering to be bumped off flights."

Unlucky prowler runs into family of joggers

EDMONTON (CP) — The prowler who invaded Basil O'Brien's home didn't know what he was running into.

In bare feet and underwear the O'Brien boys and their father, all long-distance runners, literally ran the prowler into the ground.

"We were all out the door and chasing the guy before we knew what we were doing," said O'Brien, 47, president of the Edmonton Track and Field Council.

Most of the family was sleeping soundly at 4:30 a.m. Saturday. Only Ada O'Brien, the boys' mother, was having difficulty sleeping.

"I heard noises downstairs and at first I thought it was one of the kids," Mrs. O'Brien said. She got out of bed and spotted a darkly-dressed man crouched on the TV room floor.

The man jumped up, ran outside through the patio windows, then stopped to turn around and stare at Mrs. O'Brien.

Her shouts of burglar, burglar catapulted her husband four sons from their beds. Chris, 22, was the first up the stairs from his basement bedroom.

"I just leaped up the stairs. The front door was open and I just took off after him," said Chris, a six-year running veteran known in the family as the Marathon Man.

"I saw everyone charging out the front door and I took off out the door after them," said Kevin, 20.

"The whole family got involved in the chase," he said, while their mother phoned the police.

It was Chris who ran the prowler to ground across lawns, streets and through a stubble field.

"It was killing my feet but I didn't notice until later."

Chris chased the prowler for almost a mile before hauling him down with a flying tackle. He pulled the prowler's jacket off and was starting to walk away leaving the man gasping for air on the ground.

"There was no one around and I couldn't drag him back, so I took his jacket and started to walk away. I saw police lights and I thought, oh no, I'm in my underwear."

Turning around, Chris saw the prowler back on his feet and starting to run again. A 250-yard chase, another tackle and a brief wrestling match finally subdued him

Jogging away with $300

A jogger-turned-bandit held up a small convenience store near Oak Bay junction Monday night and sprinted away with about $300 from the till.

City police today were searching for the suspect, described as a man in his mid-20s.

A police spokesman said the knife-wielding man jogged into Freddy The Freeloaders at 1537 Fort shortly before 8:30 p.m. and ordered clerk Charles Griffiths, 23, to open the till.

There was no one else in the store at the time.

Charlotte hospital closure threat

The Queen Charlotte General Hospital will be forced to close its doors unless the provincial health ministry relents on proposed budget cutbacks, hospital administrator Neil Gibbs said today.

Gibbs said from his office in the Charlottes, however, that he feels the provincial government will reconsider its position and provide the hospital with additional funds.

The government has chopped the hospital's budget by about $76,000 over 1978 figures — proposing funding of $131,000 less than the $621,000 requested this year.

Gibbs says the figures suggested by the ministry of health would mean reducing the hospital's full-time staff level from 24 employees to 14.

"At that staffing level an unsafe situation would be created . . . so we would have to close it down," Gibbs said in an interview.

He added, though, that "I don't feel that any reasonable or responsible person, once aware of the facts, would force such an action."

Gibbs said the hospital has launched an appeal against the proposed budget cutback and expected a final decision by the end of June.

In the meantime the hospital will continue to operate as normal.

Gibbs said the ministry had based its budget decision on a predicted decline in patients, but figures for the first three months of this year indicate an increased patient load beyond the hosptial's original estimate.

"Sometimes things change overnight," said Gibbs in explaining the hospital's underestimate on patient load, "and that's what happened in this case."

In addition to budget problems the hospital is facing difficulties because of a threatened walk-out by the five provincially-employed doctors that staff the 50-bed unit.

The five doctors tendered their resignations effective July 1 in a dispute with the health ministry about overtime payments. The doctors say they will quit unless there is a long-term commitment from the ministry that they will be paid for visiting patients outside of office hours.

The ministry says the request is under negotiation and, while it has agreed in principal to pay for visiting patients outside normal hours, it will not make a long-term commitment until the negotiations have been completed.

PCs seek televised swear-in

OTTAWA (CP) — Federal political power will pass formally to Joe Clark and his Progressive Conservatives from Pierre Trudeau's Liberals at what may be a protocol-breaking televised ceremony Monday at Government House.

Trudeau meets Gov.-Gen. Edward Schreyer today to advise him of his intention to resign. Schreyer has invited Clark to his residence later in the day to ask the Progressive Conservative leader if he can form a government.

Monday, Trudeau will resign formally in the morning. Clark and his cabinet will be worn in during the afternoon.

Sources say Conservatives want to open the traditionally private ceremony to television, moving the event from the Governor-General's study to the ballroom at Government House.

Schreyer will decide whether to allow the plan.

Trudeau, Clark and NDP Leader Ed Broadbent have arranged meetings to discuss the changeover.

Judicial recount asked in Vancouver Centre

VANCOUVER (CP) — A judicial recount of ballots cast in Vancouver Centre in the May 22 federal election was ordered Monday following a request by the Progressive Conservative party.

On Friday, an official addition of figures in the riding showed Liberal Art Phillips, former mayor of Vancouver, elected with 15,437 votes, 100 more than Tory candidate Pat Carney. Phillips was the only Liberal elected west of Manitoba.

However, on election night a preliminary count showed Carney two votes ahead of Phillips.

The reduction in Conservative seats gave the NDP the balance of power in the 282-seat Parliament. The Conservatives have 135 seats, the Liberals 115, the NDP 26 and Social Credit six.

County court Judge David Campbell will start the recount on Wednesday.

Meanwhile, the Tories hope to gain another seat in Toronto. An application for a judicial recount of votes cast in the Toronto riding of Parkdale-High Park was accepted in county court Monday.

Yuri Shymko, the Progressive Conservative who won the riding in a 1978 byelection, said he asked for a recount after latest official vote totals from the riding's returns officers showed he trailed Liberal Jesse Flis by 61 votes.

The margin of victory announced election night was 437. That figure was reduced to 61 last Thursday after a check of statistical sheets compiled by deputy returning officers election night.

The recount is to begin Friday morning and take a week to 10 days to complete.

In Montreal, a recalculation of voting totals from the polls in Montreal St. Michel riding in the May 22 federal election has stripped the Liberal candidate of more than 6,000 votes.

That doesn't mean an upset, however. It just means Therese Killens, the Liberal winner, has a plurality of nearly 25,000 votes over the Social Credit runner-up instead of the 31,000-odd votes indicated by election-night figures.

Gisele Goyette, returning officer for the riding, said Monday some duplications in addition on election night led to the inflated figure for Mrs. Killens. Late the same night the figures were recalculated correctly, but the news wasn't passed to all those who had been given the erroneous figures by returning-office representatives.

For the record, Mrs. Killens received 29,046 votes, Socred John Mitchell got 4,293, Jean-Louis Pozza of the Conservatives, 2,604, Filippo Salvatore of the New Democrats 2,587, and another 2,242 votes were divided among four minor-party candidates.

Lovers already knew it: Venus anything but dull

WASHINGTON (AP) — Venus, far from being dull and featureless as many suspected, is a dynamic planet with spectacular terrain and a unique, driving atmosphere, scientists said today.

In the first complete report on the Pioneer Venus spacecraft missions, scientists said radar images show a mountain higher than Mount Everest, the largest rift valley so far sighted in the solar system and a giant plateau dwarfing any found on earth.

And the planet looks like a fuzzy yellow tennis ball because its thick clouds have a unique circulation system made up of atmospheric layers that drive one another with their motion, the scientists said.

The U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) scheduled the briefing by Pioneer project scientists at the annual meeting of the American Geophysical Union.

Pioneer Venus 1 went into orbit around earth's sister planet last December and has been sending back radar and other information since then.

Pioneer Venus 2 arrived days later and divided into five atmospheric probes, four of which reached the smoldering 480°C. surface.

Dr. Harold Masursky of the U.S. Geological Survey said images constructed from radar scanning show a 11,100-metre-high mountain, unofficially called Maxwell, that would tower over earth's largest, the 8,700-metre Mount Everest.

On the opposite side of Venus is a giant rift valley with a crack in the planetary crust down the middle. Masursky said the valley is about 7.2 kilometres deep from its highest ridges and may run for thousands of kilometres.

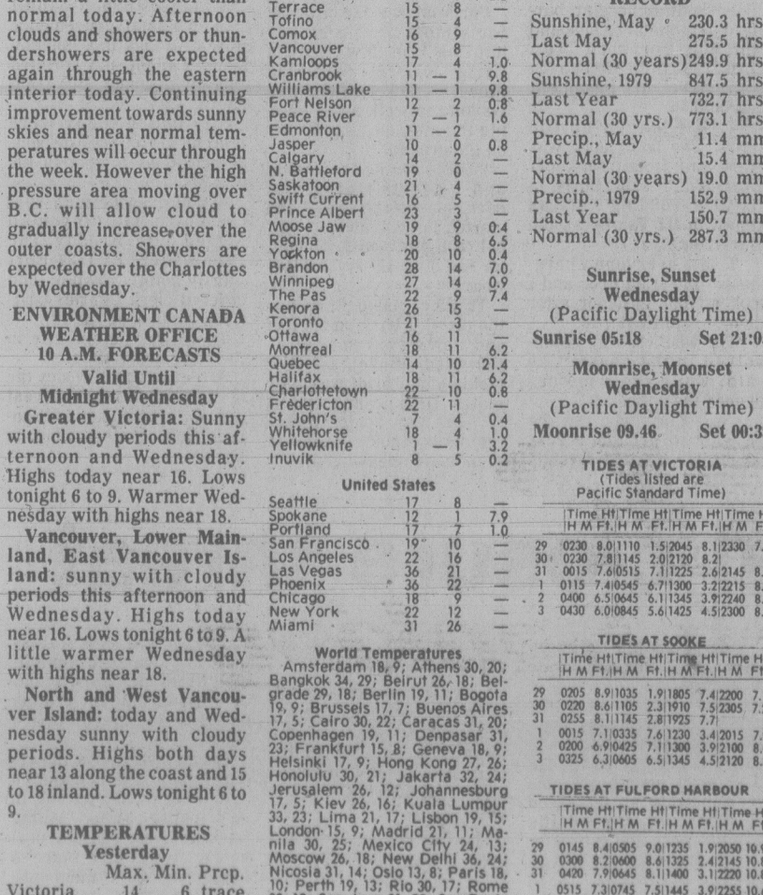

Dr. Alvin Seiff of NASA's Ames Research Centre in California said in an interview that Venus has an atmospheric circulation system different from any known elsewhere.

On the earth, sunlight is absorbed by land and the resulting heat, coupled with the planet's rotation, drives atmospheric motion from west to east.

On Venus, sunlight is absorbed in the atmosphere between 48 and 53 kilometres above the surface, Seiff said. These layers of air, or cells, flow north and south from the equator at speeds of up to 640 km/h to spread heat and motion through the atmosphere.

Map valid until noon Wednesday

The cool unsettled weather for the past few days has begun to moderate as a high pressure system builds from the west. Temperatures will remain a little cooler than normal today. Afternoon clouds and showers or thundershowers are expected again through the eastern interior today. Continuing improvement towards sunny skies and near normal temperatures will occur through the week. However the high pressure area moving over B.C. will allow cloud to gradually increase over the outer coasts. Showers are expected over the Charlottes by Wednesday.

Gas crisis filling up Marguerite

Passenger traffic on the Princess Marquerite cruise ship increased from 10 to 15 per cent during its first month of operation in 1979 compared with the same period a year ago, Tourism Minister Elwood Veitch said today.

Veitch said the increased traffic so far this month is owing to the gasoline shortage in the United States and an earlier start to sailings this season between here and Seattle.

He said the service will continue next year despite the fact it loses money every season.

The minister said he doubts the Marquerite will ever have the capacity to be a money-making operation because it's a costly vessel to run. He added, however, that the cruise ship provides a spinoff benefit to the people of Victoria in tourism revenues.

Scrap gains tax plan expert urges Clark

OTTAWA (CP) — Many tax experts are convinced Joe Clark's plan to abolish capital gains tax on shares of Canadian-controlled companies is short-sighted and favors the rich, says a Toronto economist.

John Bossons, who specializes in tax reform at the University of Toronto, said in a telephone interview Monday he would strongly advise the new prime minister to scrap the idea.

Bossons says the plan would introduce gross inequities into the tax system. He also maintains its long-term cost is far greater than the Conservatives have acknowledged.

"In summary it would be a very regressive step."

Clark announced the plan in Vancouver shortly before the election campaign. He said he wanted to encourage the public to get their savings "out of socks and into stocks."

The average Canadian stashes away 10 per cent of his income — a much higher proportion than most other nationalities. Clark says his plan would channel some of this money into new industrial growth.

Bossons agrees the abolition of capital gains tax on Canadian equities would lead to an increase in corporate investment. But he believes the costs of the plan outweigh its benefits and says many tax professionals share this view.

"The proposal would create opportunities for substantial tax avoidance by wealthy individuals who can arrange their affairs to take advantage of the exemption," he wrote in a recent article published by the Canadian Tax Journal, a publication for lawyers and accountants.

He said in the interview that the average taxpayer — earning about $20,000 — derives most of his income from his wage or salary. Even if he takes advantage of the new tax break, his participation in the stock market would have to be small-scale.

The person in the $100,000 range, by contrast, is already deriving a large part of his income from capital gains. Being familiar with this type of investment, he would immediately see the tax advantage of further investment and would have the available funds.

The Conservatives have estimated abolition of capital gains tax on Canadian shares would cost the federal treasury about $50 million a year.

Bossons estimates the cost over the next decade at approximately $500 million a year in 1979 dollars.

Although the loss of tax revenue would be small for the first year or two of the program, the government would be forfeiting its access to a source of funds that is growing every year, he says.

The business community has made it clear it supports Clark's plan enthusiastically. Bossons says these same corporate spokesmen opposed the idea of capital gains tax when it was first being considered the late 1960s.

In spite of their objections, then-finance minister John Turner was persuaded that the tax system would be fairer if the government began taxing money made by investors.

The capital gains tax, which has been revised several times since 1971, now is imposed on half of all earnings made by investors, after an initial tax-free $1,000.

Trustees rake own commmittees

The board's personnel committee, now discussing vice-principal tenure policy, was accused by several trustees of shirking its responsibility to the public by contemplating holding meetings in camera.

Board chairman Carol Pickup explained some meetings might not be held in public because individuals would be discussed.

Trustee Peter Yorke said all committee meetings should by public because the tenure policy will "change the leadership pattern of this district."

"I agree it would be easier to have things behind closed doors; it would be less dicey." Brice said. "But we have a responsibility to the public. I don't think the board should stand for it."

Young said if the committee voted to conduct meetings privately he would have to go along with he decision, even if he didn't agree with it.

According to Yorke, the tenure issue has never been discussed in camera and there is no reason for the committee to start private talks now.

But Pickup said some matters must be discussed privately.

"I personally feel that since this is a rather serious issue, in order to have open, frank, honest discussion it is necessary many times to hold meetings in camera."

"You can say what you like and the public will never know. I am violently opposed to it," Yorke said.

Trustees also took the opportunity to attack the work of other committees.

Glyn Williams said he was unhappy with the student review committee because discussion of suspension policy has been delayed five months.

Some students are suspended for three weeks and many as long as five weeks, Williams said.

"It is clear as anything that some of these students are mentally ill or emotionally ill or victims of circumstances beyond their control."

Young said in this district last year, 414 students were suspended for up to five days, compared with 31 similar suspensions in another large district he did not identify.

Suspensions for periods longer than five days were handed out to 41 students.

This year 388 students have been suspended for up to five days and 31 for more than five days, he said.

His statistics were not challenged by schools superintendent Allan Stables or other trustees.

Young suggested the board create creative and imaginative recommendations for principals to follow as alternatives to suspension.

"When we put them out of school they end up on somebody else's list."

Next to criticize was trustee Mark Fisher who said he was disappointed in the personnel and the planning committee.

The personnel committee hasn't put forward one acceptable recommendation since it was set up, Fisher charged.

Fisher is a member of the planning committee and he accused that group of "wallowing in the eccentricities of a philosophic view of planning and personnel."

Where have all the flowers gone at funerals?

Florists wilt as mourners give to foundations

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Some of the bloom has gone off their business and florists fear people are forgetting how to say it with flowers.

Floral tributes and memorial wreaths have declined in the past 15 years to the point where the industry estimates it is losing $30 million in sales a year.

The reason is that friends of the deceased are urged more and more to donate money to charitable foundations like the Heart Fund and Cancer Society.

Obituary columns in newspapers say "flowers gratefully declined," "please omit flowers," and "no flowers by request." Some suggest donations to a foundation, but few leave it to personal choice.

"It prevents someone who wants to remember with flowers from doing so," said Chris Dysart, head of a committee of Victoria florists concerned about the situation.

"Also, there may be people who want to do both" who are discouraged by the obituary notice.

She said the potential of flowers at a funeral is sometimes not appreciated.

"They can have a softening effect on the service."

But florists are not ignoring the fact that customs change, even though some flower businesses have been especially hard hit.

The pendulum swings, Dysart said, and it may be starting to swing back.

To help it happen they are considering increased advertising, including discreet messages adjoining the obituaries.

They also are looking at developing other opportunities, like the cash-and-carry trade for cut flowers, offering Friday flower specials for brightening livingrooms and apartments over a weekend.

Flowers Canada, the florists' professional organization, estimates the industry is worth $500 million.

But charities and medical research do not get the whole benefit of any loss of funeral flower business.

The Ontario Heart Foundation, for example, reckons it picked up $300,000 extra in 1977-78 because of the "no-flowers" trend.

Last year the Ontario division of the Cancer Society made nearly $1 million more in memorial donations than in 1977.

"The amazing thing is that it's almost completely unsolicited by the society," said executive director Alan Martin.

Betty Carter, former Flowers Canada Vancouver Island representative, said the heart fund has not reaped the full benefit, that extra donations are considerably smaller than what people would have spent to send flowers.

In addition, she said, there is the cost of accounting, of sending acknowledgements to survivors and receipts to the donors.

Graham McCall, of McCall Bros. funeral directors, doubted the charities made up the full value of business lost to florists.

"It is wonderful if people do send a donation to the heart fund. But then they don't do it. We all procrastinate."

He observed that many people hold the opinion that flowers are for the living, but there are also many — especially close members of a family — who feel flowers are most appropriate at a funeral service.

"It's a very personal thing. No funeral home that I know of influences thinking," he said.

Some undertakers say most people have made up their minds they don't want flowers before coming in to make funeral arrangements.

TOWN TALK

A number of stores in Greater Victoria — particularly small outlets near schools — have posted signs banning students over the lunch period.

Ostensibly the move is to cut down on shoplifting but Saanich resident Ruby Belknap feels it's grossly unfair to tar all the kids with the same brush.

Mrs. Belknap, whose husband Vic, former superintendent of child welfare in B.C., has been championing kids' causes for more than a quarter century, got mad when she spotted a sign banning kids from the Economart Food store in Royal Oak shopping centre.

She says she tried to get the manager to remove the sign but he refused and when she went to the Human Rights branch, was told nothing could be done.

HALEY
. . . unscheduled sidetrip

Best-seller author Alex Haley of Roots fame made many sidetrips during research for his acclaimed novel but probably not one as unscheduled as the sudden ferry ride he took on Monday.

Haley and a companion took their rented motorhome to Horseshoe Bay in West Vancouver but got into the wrong traffic lane and ended up jammed bumper-to-bumper with a couple of hundred other vehicles heading to Vancouver Island.

Rather than complicate the matter further, Haley elected to take the ferry ride to Nanaimo, saying later he liked the city so much that he was going to stay a day or two.

The freak fire-of-the-month award should go to Oak Bay.

The fire department, in a report to council Monday night covering April, said a a plastic plant pot suspended in a macrame holder in an Estevan Avenue house dropped to the dining room floor burning a small portion of shag carpet and scorching the base of a nearby buffet.

It is possible, said the department, that the rays of the early morning sun, reflected from a mirror on to the plastic pot, caused it to melt and burn the macrame. Damage: $235.

All you Scotch drinkers, take heart. If you think the price of a bottle is unbearably high here, consider the plight of those in the land where it's produced.

City police Insp. Scotty Grant, who recently visited his homeland, says a bottle of the ordinary, nothing special stuff costs about $10.60, more than 20 per cent more than the price here. Malt whisky is even dearer. About $16 is average.

Ask Esquimalt police Sgt. Jack Wright what he got for his birthday last week and he'll tell you with a wide grin — $100,000.

He says he's been buying books of tickets almost since the lottery's inception from his father John Wright, a retired carpenter.

Six months ago when he won three $25 prizes in a row, he turned to his wife Carmen and said: "It looks like the big one is coming up."

It did. On May 16. His 48th birthday.

Don't ask him, however, what he's going to do with the money. He has no mortgage on his house. He owns a boat which he seldom uses. He and his wife did a fair bit of travelling last year and found tourism wasn't quite their bag.

"We've got no plans," he says. "I suppose we'll look around for investment, but I just don't know."

North Cowichan incinerator the next stop for marijuana

Little hope held for fugitives but hunt poised

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

RCMP are preparing a major search for two men believed to have fled into dense bush north of Tofino following last Tuesday's 35-ton marijuana bust at Sydney Inlet, although officers hold little hope of finding either alive.

Superintendent Bill Sherman of RCMP divisional headquarters in Courtenay said today logistics for the search are being worked out and should be completed by the end of the week.

He said the search will involve helicopters, dog-teams and scores of personnel in one "last-ditch" effort to try to locate two American men, the only members of an alleged marijuana smuggling group still unaccounted for.

Names of the pair have not been released. Both are white, aged 27 and 34. One is believed to have arrived in the inlet aboard the pleasure boat Whitecap, the other aboard the light freighter Samarkanda. The vessels were seized by police in the drug raid which resulted in the arrest of 21.

Sherman said only two officers aboard the RCMP patrol boat Duncan out of Tahsis are left of a search party that spent six days combing the rugged countryside for other suspects.

Sherman said the officers are carrying out a shoreline patrol using loud hailers and sirens.

He said searchers, including tracking dogs teams and officers in helicopters with special heat-sensing devices, have failed to pick up any sign of the men.

Although there is little hope either will be found alive, Sherman said one final search will be made, larger than any before.

Meanwhile, about 30 RCMP officers began the task this morning of destroying the 35-tons of marijuana in the municipal incinerator at North Cowichan.

The drug was unloaded from the Samarkanda at the Armed Forces dock in Esquimalt Monday and taken this morning to the North Cowichan site in two tractor-trailers and a smaller truckrented from Johnson Terminals.

The 21 suspects in custody appeared in Victoria provincial court Monday and were remanded to Friday for possible bail hearings.

All have been charged with importing marijuana, possession of marijuana for the purposes of trafficking and conspiring to import the drug between April 1 and May 23.

Roger Hanson, a lawyer from Santa Ana, Calif., attempted to represent the accused but was deemed ineligible because he does not hold a membership in the provincial bar association.

Crown counsel Gordon Macdonald advised Judge William Ostler that Hanson intended to confer with Victoria lawyer Patrick Sweeney, who was in Vancouver on Monday, in connection with the case and requested a remanded until Friday.

$1 offer for old wharf

North Saanich council Monday night authorized Mayor George Westwood and municipal clerk Edward Fairs to negotiate purchase of the Deep Cove government wharf from the federal government.

The municipality is hoping to buy the six-foot wide, 287-foot long structure for $1 and renovate it for use as a public dock.

Fairs said today talks with Transport Canada officials will begin later this week.

The municipality has already commissioned Graham & Murray engineering firm to survey the wharf and come up with recommendations.

Can Dash 7 draw noise test zero?

Victorians will get a chance to complain about a new noise Wednesday afternoon when a De Havilland Dash 7 circles the city to see if anyone notices.

The short takeoff and landing aircraft will land at Work Point at 2 p.m. and conduct flight tests for about one hour.

Transport Canada officials will be on hand to check decibel levels but the main interest will be in citizen response.

"It will be significant if no one complains," Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Mel Cooper said.

The test is part of a transportation day program being sponsored by the chamber.

Cooper said the chamber is withholding judgment on the feasibility of STOL craft until the results of the tests are known and are incorporated in a report due at the end of June.

But De Havilland officials say they are already certain of the results.

"The Dash 7 is so quiet no one will know it is there," Western Canada sales manager Michael Warwicke said.

"That's the problem with the Dash 7. It is just too quiet. People are not aware of it."

If feasible, the STOL service would operate from Work Point to a site near downtown Vancouver. Locating a site on the Vancouver side has been a major obstacle to the proposal.

The Dash 7 arrives at Victoria International Airport tonight and tests will start following a luncheon speech by De Havilland president John Sandford at The Empress.

The day's events will begin with a transportation seminar at the Princess Mary restaurant from 8 a.m. to 10 a.m. Wednesday.

Okay given Jubilee plan

Royal Jubilee Hospital has been given full support by Health Minister Bob McClelland for its plan to reorganize its administration and financial management.

Hospital board chairman Terry Prentice said today the board's executive committee met the minister Monday to discuss recommendations made by a seven-member survey team.

The recommendations outline needed revisions of the hospital's administrative structure and urge the complete overhaul of the hospital's computerized management information system.

Prentice said the hospital will begin implementing immediately any changes that can be made without spending extra money.

He said McClelland supported the hiring of a project director, whose duties will be to carry out most of the report's 68 recommendations.

After the director has been hired, a budget to cover the cost of implementing the recommendations will be drawn up and discussed with the minister, Prentice said.

IWA joins fight against oil tank switch

The International Woodworkers of America will join View Royal residents in their fight against the proposed transfer of Inner Harbor oil tanks to Plumper Bay in Esquimalt Harbor.

IWA spokesmen were among 120 persons who crowded into the small community hall Monday night at a meeting arranged by the View Royal Ratepayers and Community Association.

The IWA is concerned about accidents that could result in the loss of lives and jobs of some 350 people who work at Victoria Plywood Ltd., adjacent to the proposed tank farm site.

Jack Groves, first vice-president of the Victoria IWA local, said Esquimalt harbor is already loaded with logging industry traffic and oil traffic running north and south would conflict with the east-west lumber traffic. Navy traffic, he said, would aggravate the problem.

IWA business agent Al Carle said View Royal is becoming "the compost box of southern Vancouver Island because that is the kind of industry moving in, the kind unwanted elsewhere."

A tank farm in Plumper Bay, he said, would place oil barges in the middle of a busy booming ground. Unloading facilities, he added, could be located next to the mill's power house, threatening industrial accidents.

Capt. Rodney Trail, who said he has served as master aboard tankers, warned that tankers empty at a massive rate, causing a lot of fumes.

"You are going to have those fumes going right into the new housing development or into the trailer park on the Indian land which is heated by propane, a very vulnerable gas," he said.

He said the winter winds would drive the fumes down on the sawmill "which would just go up in one big bang."

Dr. R.A. Watson said View Royal would be wiped out by an explosion on the tank farm.

Victoria Plywood manager Newton Cameron said he has been assured the tanks would be put underground in rock. The feeder lines from oil barges would either be underground or under water.

He said an oil tank farm is built underground in the middle of Paris.

But former Saanich fire chief Joe Sutherland said going underground meant only that people would not see the tanks but it would not stop explosions.

Cameron conceded the mill has five or six dryer fires a year "but we have a fairly high roof and we have been able to contain the fires."

IWA business agent Murray Drew said a few thousand gallons of fuel in a storage tank caught fire a few years ago and the mill was saved only by woodworkers who turned out to fight the fire.

Regional director Al Beasley said one of the reasons Victoria wants the oil tanks moved from the Inner Harbor is that the land is now worth $17 a square foot.

Robin Spear said Oak Bay's regional director Shirley Dowell, who heads the oil tank relocation committee, had deliberately misled or been ignorant of the facts when she said an oil tank farm in View Royal would lower taxes.

"There'll be no bonanza in tax reductions," he said.

While most attending the meeting were opposed to oil tanks in View Royal, one resident was not convinced it was a bad idea.

Mrs. Frances Cammiade, 119 Helmcken, told reporters she had lived in View Royal for 19 years and was not convinced a tank farm could pose threats if all the necessary precautions were taken.

She said the ratepayers' association did not speak for all View Royal residents.

"They have a negative view and fight everything proposed for View Royal," she added.
